River Bar
661 Assembly Row, Somerville
(617-616-5561) river-bar.com

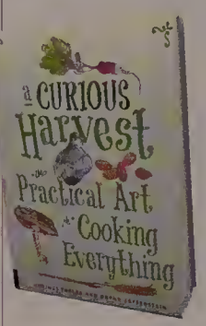
IT WAS ONCE DIFFICULT TO IMAGINE THE Mystic River as a backdrop for waterfront dining, but the tides are changing. Assembly Row's park on the bank of the Mystic provides a picturesque environment, and River Bar is poised to take advantage of those views when it opens in mid-October.

With a patio twice as large as its interior, River Bar's alfresco focus is obvious. That outdoor space will be heated and partially covered—allowing for three-season use—and features a bar, fire pits, lounge seating and room for 123 patrons to enjoy the titular river's vistas. And with the restaurant's glass exterior, even the diners inside will be able to soak in the setting.

But owner Ken Kelly has more than just pretty panoramas planned at his fifth Somerville restaurant, which joins Foundry on Elm, the Independent, Brass Union and Saloon. He's brought in Patrick Gilmartin (Staff Meal Food Truck) to helm the kitchen with a menu centered on bar snacks and meaty small plates. The "elevated street food" encompasses shrimp chips with black garlic aioli, chicken and brie terrine and the chorizo Scotch quail eggs that Gilmartin used to make on his food truck. More traditional main dishes will include a roasted vadouvan half chicken with baby eggplant and yogurt. And seven of the 36 indoor seats will be at a culinary bar, offering closer interaction with the kitchen, which will serve lunch, dinner, weekend brunch and a late-night menu.

"We're really going for a fun and modern vibe," Gilmartin says. "The whole concept is creating a kind of bar we'd want to hang out in."

That concept extends to the spirits, with River Bar promising to be cocktail-centric and pull in bartenders from Kelly's other ventures to work under Jess Willis. The menu incorporates modern twists on classic drinks and seasonal selections, such as an absinthe frappe. And the tap list will be filled with local craft beers and limited releases. For Gilmartin, who lives a five-minute walk from the restaurant, it was essential to showcase those local purveyors.



"It's an interesting location, and it's changing for the better," Gilmartin says of Assembly Row, which is booming with a new T stop, apartments, premium outlets, a bevy of restaurants and a movie theater. "But it was very important for us to remind people a little of local Somerville. And to drive some local traffic to the area."

FLAVORFUL WRITING

FALL IS COOKBOOK SEASON, AND this year's local harvest is a bumper crop, with many selections ripe for the reading.

The first standout is Maximus Thaler's A Curious Harvest: The Practical Art of Cooking Everything. You may remember Thaler as the dumpster-diving recent Tufts grad who unsuccessfully tried to start an "underground" community-building restaurant and grocery store called the Gleaners' Kitchen in Somerville. He's teamed with illustrator Dayna Safferstein for this primer on cooking sans pricey supermarket trips. Instead of recipes, he offers information designed to "cultivate an intuition on how to prepare and combine ingredients" already on hand. The question that starts the cooking process isn't "What do I want?" but "What do I have?" It's a useful and attractive book for cooks who don't have much experience and want to be resourceful.

There are also two new books from Boston chefs hitting shelves. Co-written with Erin Byers Murray, The New England Kitchen: Fresh Takes on Seasonal Recipes has chef Jeremy Sewall of Lineage, Eastern Standard, Island Creek Oyster Bar and Row 34 exploring his regional roots through more than 100 recipes, including a maple-brined pork rack with apples and leeks, which is reason enough to look forward to chilly nights. And if you've wanted to go whole-hog into whole animals at home, Jamie Bissonnette's The New Charcuterie Cookbook: Exceptional Cured Meats to Make and Serve at Home will make you very happy. Learn how to make sausage, salami, ham, pastrami, pâté and confit from the well-known oracle of offal and chef/co-owner of Coppa and Toro (with Ken Oringer, of course). You'll be sure to impress your friends with whipped pork butter with chestnut honey, or lobster and sweetbread terrine.

And finally, the icing on the kale—just kidding. There's no kale cake in Kale, Glorious Kale by Catherine Walthers, a Martha's Vineyard-based author and private chef. But the roster of recipes does run the gamut from salads and smoothies to casseroles and cocktails. This comprehensive compendium of kale may be just the ticket to convert skeptics into fans of the hyper-nutritious green.

CALIFORNIA DREAMIN'

Many wine pros are quick to dismiss California chardonnay as too popular, too overblown and too ripe and tropical in flavor to be worthy of consideration. While this widespread prejudice holds that wines showing even a trace of oak treatment pander to the most superficial and homogenized of consumer tastes, I could not disagree more. When handled with skill and finesse—as the following three producers consistently do—super-premium-priced, barrel-fermented chardonnay can be distinctive, precise and delicious. / Sandy Block

MELVILLE ESTATE CHARDONNAY, SANTA RITA HILLS, 2012
Originating from vineyards that lie quite close to the Pacific Coast in Santa Barbara County, the grapes that form this razor's edge chardonnay enjoy the longest growing season in California and benefit from cold, windy weather that rarely exceeds 70 degrees, but is also dry and exceptionally sunny. The wine's saline and stony bite reflects a strong oceanic influence in the soils that master craftsman Greg Brewer preserves through a minimalist "hands off" discipline. Fresh and lemony, it's ideal with grilled fish. $32, Wine Gallery, Brookline

PAUL HOBBS CHARDONNAY, RUSSIAN RIVER VALLEY, 2012
Richness, subtlety and layers of flavor are Paul Hobbs trademarks regardless of the variety, but this is certainly the finest non-vineyard-designated chardonnay of his that I have tasted. For the most part, California's wine regions experienced mild, dry and tranquil weather from bloom through harvest in 2012, yielding a bumper crop of delicious, healthy and well-ripened fruit. This one is silky-smooth and expresses a fine balance of earthy apple, toast and caramel-like notes. It's a perfect choice for lobster. $57, The Urban Grape, Boston

PATZ & HALL CHARDONNAY, SONOMA COAST, 2012
Having followed it for a number of years, I've found this blend consistently outstanding, but the 2012 vintage rises to new heights. Medium-deep in color, with pear, almond and smoky notes, it's bright but also supple in texture, with finely integrated spice and mineral notes punctuating the finish. The largest proportion of fruit in this wine is from Gap's Crown, a Sonoma Mountain vineyard that overlooks the Petaluma Gap, but there are also components from such storied Sonoma vineyards as Durell, Dutton Ranch and Zio Tony Ranch. $38, Brix Wine Shop, Boston

Hot Plates

The mercury may be falling, but the dining scene is only heating up. Here, chefs from four hotly anticipated fall openings whet our appetites with one standout dish from their forthcoming menus. / Jacqueline Houton

THE PLACE	THE PLATE	THE CHEF'S TAKE
AMES STREET DELI, a Kendall spot for daytime sammies and nighttime cocktails by the Journeyman team	A roasted cauliflower sandwich with tobiko, pickled green beans, shiso and toasted nori	"As luscious and full of umami as pork belly can be, this lunch sandwich is so healthy you will absolutely deserve a dessert afterward," says chef/co-owner Diana Kudajarova.
The newly renovated BUKOWSKI TAVERN in Cambridge, reopening under chef/co-owner Brian Poe	A hot dog trio: a mini alligator Andouille sausage with corn tartar sauce, a bison dog with sorachi ketchup and a venison frank with basil-cucumber relish	"The menu at Buks is going to be very burger-centric, but we won't forget the tots or the hot dogs!" says Poe, who also helms Poe's Kitchen, the Tip Tap Room and Estelle's (whew!).
CAFE ARTSCIENCE, housed in new art and design center Le Laboratoire Cambridge	Burnt tarragon-encrusted beef carpaccio with poached lobster salad, XO sauce, matsutake mushrooms and burgundy truffle	"That's on the more refined side," says chef Patrick Campbell, formerly of No. 9 Park. "Lunch is going to be very different from dinner—high-volume, fast-paced and a lot more casual."
JP's revamped CENTRE STREET CAFE, reopening as an Italian eatery from the Tres Gatos team	Pizzoccheri lasagna with buckwheat pasta, butter-braised cabbage, confit potatoes and swiss chard, topped with fontina fonduta and fried sage	"It's an Italian regional dish that will utilize all local produce from Stillman's Farm," says executive chef Brian Rae, former chef de cuisine at Rialto. "For me, this dish means fall is here."

LOCAL EATS + LOCAL BEATS

"We're a little bit kitchen, we're a little bit rock 'n' roll," says Cuisine en Locale founder JJ Gonson. Less than a year ago, her locavore catering and meal delivery service moved into a new HQ in the old Anthony's space on Highland Avenue in Somerville. But with a capacity of 400, the funky function hall isn't just home to Cuisine en Locale's prep kitchen and Monday night taco suppers; recently, it's also been making noise as a live music venue. Case in point: the Pipeline!* at 25 concert series, which continues through Oct. 12 at five venues, Cuisine en Locale included, and marks the 25th anniversary of the legendary WMBR-FM (88.1) showcase for live local music.

"Sean O'Brien, the lead in my kitchen, was talking with Bob Dubrow [Pipeline! host from 1993 to 2003] when he was first imagining this wide-ranging anniversary event," Gonson recalls. The idea immediately resonated with her team. "Aside from the fact that we all believe strongly in food and community, it also happens that some of us have very, very deep roots in music." That's almost an understatement. Gonson spent years photographing punk and hardcore acts and ran her own indie label, and the staff also includes local luminaries such as veteran producer Ken Cmar and celebrated singer/guitarist Thalia Zedek of Live Skull, Come and her own eponymous band.

There's still time to catch a Pipeline! show—Cuisine en Locale is hosting closing concerts on Oct. 10 and 11. (If you go, be sure to scope out Boston Rock Flashbacks, an exhibit of photos by Improper contributing music editor Paul Robicheau, from portraits of Mark Sandman and Dropkick Murphys to live shots of Throwing Muses and Evan Dando.) And there's more music to come, including November's Boston Hassle Fest, headlined by Kim Gordon of Sonic Youth and Bill Nace. In the meantime, we tapped Gonson to find out what keeps her crew moving in the kitchen. / Tom Kielty

CUISINE EN LOCALE shares the soundtrack for the kitchen...

"We listen to a lot of Clash," Gansan says. "I love that the Closh understaad you could be paliticol and get something done with music."

... Anather punk favarite? "'Adult Baaks' by X mokes me jump up and dawn and paga while I caak!"

... As far newer music, Ganson says that Alt-J's music has a "great groove to it, especially 'Breezeblacks.'"

... "And I love Calaur Me Wednesday," Ganson adds. "They played here, and they're cute and heavy and girls, and one was wearing a Blake Babies shirt that she made!"

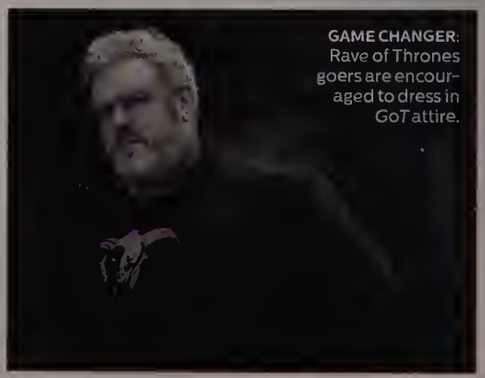
WATCH THE THRONE

Game of Thrones fans know Kristian Nairn best as Hodor, Bran Stark's slow but steady caretaker. But on his current Rave of Thrones tour, which hits Prime on Oct. 12, the Irish actor and DJ of almost 20 years will hold court behind the turntables. We caught up with Nairn, who's amassed something of a cult following after coming out as gay on a Game of Thrones fan site in March, before his stop in town. / Alexandra Cavallo



WHAT WOULD YOU SAY TO PEOPLE WHO GRIPE THAT EDM ISN'T "REAL MUSIC" BECAUSE IT'S JUST "PUSHING BUTTONS"? It's the same as anything—my mom used to be told that the Rolling Stones weren't musicians and just made noise. It's the same blinkered people who believe that just because something isn't their taste, then it's bad and anyone could do it. Not everyone who picks up a guitar and strums a chord is a guitar player, and not every motorist is a Formula One driver. Anyone can push button, but not everyone is a DJ.

WHAT'S THE CRAZIEST THING THAT'S HAPPENED SO FAR ON THE TOUR? Every gig has had the "Hodor" chant. No matter where in the world, it happens, and sometimes all I can do is stand and grin like an idiot. It's overwhelming. I never thought I would be in this position, and I'm so goddamn grateful that I am. It's an incredible vehicle for me to bring my sound to the world.

YOU HAVE A PRETTY DEVOTED FAN BASE, BOTH IN THE GAY COMMUNITY AND AMONG GAME OF THRONES VIEWERS. WHAT'S THE WEIRDEST, OR NICEST, THING A FAN HAS EVER DONE? I honestly don't feel worthy most of the time. People, in general, are amazingly nice and supportive. Obviously the Internet is, well, the Internet, but it's easy to avoid for the most part. It still surprises me on social media sometimes, the level of personal questions you will get asked. Some things I wouldn't ask someone I had known for years!

ONE THRONES QUESTION: I THOUGHT JOFFREY'S DEATH WAS A RIP-OFF. I WANTED HIM TO DIE MORE HORRIBLY. HOW WOULD YOU HAVE KILLED HIM? I disagree! I think that was the perfect way for him to die, surrounded by his court, but no one really wanting to help. And he did turn a very pretty color.

SUM UP THE RAVE OF THRONES TOUR IN ONE WORD. Euphoria.

GAME CHANGER: Rave of Thrones goers are encouraged to dress in GoT attire.

LOVE IS A BATTLEFIELD

A CAR CRASH FORCES A FAMILY TO EXAMINE THEIR ALREADY STRAINED RELATIONSHIPS.

Accidents of Marriage* by Randy Susan Meyers
Published by Atria Books, 354 pages, $25
The author lives in Boston.

IN MEYERS' THIRD NOVEL, AN ACCIDENT LEAVES social worker Maddy in a coma and gives her husband, Ben, a terrible wakeup call. His passion had fueled both their romance and his work as a public defender, but his verbal outbursts at home have ratcheted up the tension in their marriage; Maddy's work with abused women has only added bitter irony. When his anger contributes to a car crash on Jamaicaway, everything changes. Racked with guilt, Ben is cast into a protective role toward Maddy and their three children: innocent 7-year-old Caleb, sweet 9-year-old Gracie and 14-year-old Emma, whose adolescent turmoil is compounded by fury at her father.

As she starts to recover from the neurological trauma, Maddy's words come forth slowly but emphatically, fierce with her overdue rage and wonder at what she's put up with over the years. She punishes Ben, who's tortured and repentant, though still a hothead, struggling to contain his legitimate frustrations. And Emma, overwhelmed by her own new caretaking responsibilities, dabbles in pills—"tiny palace guards" designed to keep her "sadness out of the kingdom"—but displays a sarcastic, knowing wit. Drawing on her own work with domestic abusers and victims, Meyers shifts perspective from Maddy to Ben to Emma and back, artfully conveying the twisting dynamics and offering no easy answers.

FROM PAGE 144: "Why did I lie?" He winced at his words, remembering Maddy talking about her clients. When they repeat the question, I know they're lying. It's how they buy time. Wisdom he'd used in his interviews, his crosses.

"Don't play. Ben. I can't speak. So good. But I can. Think." Maddy sat cross-legged and grabbed a pillow, kneading it until he thought feathers would fly around the room.

He stayed silent—unable to find anything that could be meaningful to say. ◆

Traveler's Checks

Keep an eye on Mirbeau's new Literary Luncheon series, a partnership with Duxbury's Westwinds Bookshop. The Sept. 30 kickoff featured authors Nicole Bernier, Patry Francis, Marianne Leone and Randy Susan Meyers (whose novel Accidents of Marriage is reviewed on page 25).

Plimoth Plantation is less than a 15-minute drive from Mirbeau and not just fun for kids. Check out its just-opened Plimoth Bread Company, home to an Oxford-educated baker/historian and centuries-old recipes.

FRENCH CONNECTION: Mirbeau's luxe touches will have you feeling far from New England.

The Escape Artist / Jacqueline Houton

BEAU GESTE

MIRBEAU BRINGS A TASTE OF THE FRENCH COUNTRYSIDE TO THE SOUTH SHORE.

More than 3,000 miles divide the Bay State from the gardens of Giverny, but a new destination is hoping to bridge that gap, evoking the luxury of a French country estate in Plymouth. It's a town where the tourist industry is admittedly more apt to bring to mind buckle hats than berets, but Mirbeau Inn & Spa aims to set a transporting tone before you even step foot inside: A chanteuse's recorded crooning sounds from speakers hidden within the greenery as you approach the Manor House's front door.

A little sibling of the original Mirbeau in Skaneateles, New York, the property takes its name from Octave-Henri-Marie Mirbeau, a Belle Époque art critic who championed the likes of Claude Monet. Hence the Impressionist-style paintings that appear throughout the inn; one featuring Monet's famed water lilies greets you at check-in. Peer through the windows in the lobby bistro, and you'll see the painting come to life in the tranquil gardens, where a green footbridge gracefully arcs over lily-padded ponds and a fire pit glows by night.

Priced from $199 to $620 nightly, the 50 guest rooms likewise have French accents, from the "Shhh... s'il vous plait" door hangers to the mini-bar macarons. Many rooms boast patios overlooking the Monet-inspired gardens—a perfect place to perch with a glass of room service rosé—and while the Toile de Jouy curtains depict 18th-century pastoral scenes, the comforts are modern, with walk-in rainfall showers, deep soaking tubs and gas fireplaces flanked by cozy seating.

The accommodations are divided between the Manor House and the adjoining Guest House, connected by a rustic covered bridge. But wherever you stay, you'll want to pay a visit to the Manor House's ground-floor spa, a 14,000-square-foot oasis appointed with thoughtful details—treatment rooms' heated massage tables are lit by the flicker of fireplaces, and chilled cucumber-scented cloths wait outside the eucalyptus steam room in the expansive locker areas. With its grand columns and frescoes of bathing beauties, there's a Roman feel to the resting area, which offers 13 chaises circling a heated foot massage pool. There's also a nail salon, a blowout bar and a state-of-the-art fitness center offering classes and private instruction in everything from Pilates and yoga to golf conditioning and cycling. But you'd hardly be blamed for simply lazing at the year-round outdoor Aqua Terrace, where iridescent tiles shimmer in the hot plunge whirlpool and a wellness bar serves up cocktails and light bites, such as a grapefruit and rose petal salad or a cheese plate garnished with honey from executive chef Stephen Coe's own hives.

Heartier sustenance awaits in Mirbeau's two restaurants, both helmed by Coe, whom locals may know from his previous post at BOKX 109 American Prime in Newton's Hotel Indigo. The more casual Bistro & Wine Bar is open for breakfast, lunch and dinner. (Note: The "boulangerie" to-go option at breakfast isn't complimentary, as you might expect from the self-serve format, but the mini-quiche is well worth it.) The elegant Henri-Marie, meanwhile, serves dinner Wednesday through Saturday evenings in a gleaming white space modeled after a 19th-century chapel outside of Paris. It's here that Coe flexes his culinary muscle with painterly platings that'd do Auguste Escoffier proud; one early September feast included lobster sauced with a vivid corn puree, its flavor as bright as a summer's day distilled, alongside housemade gnocchi and an artful daub of rich chanterelle confit. The menu offers three-, five- and seven-course tastings—a format rarely seen on the South Shore, which perhaps explains why a recent Friday saw only two tables filled while the bistro buzzed with activity. However, a la carte options will be added by Oct. 1, which should help broaden Henri-Marie's appeal beyond special-occasion dining. But special it is, down to the handwritten note from the chef and jewel-like confections that welcome Henri-Marie patrons back to their freshly turned-down rooms after dinner.

Opened in late June, Mirbeau is located in the Pinehills, an award-winning planned community with its own post office, grocery and dentist. It's an unexpected setting for this kind of retreat, but the location does grant access to two 18-hole championship golf courses. And any incongruity is offset by the genuine warmth of the staff, from the porter who greets you in the parking lot to grab your bags to the server who brims with enthusiasm for the chef, whom she'd worked with at a Plymouth trattoria years before—service that helps sustain the fantasy of a luxe European escape, less than an hour's drive from Boston. ◆

MASTER OF ARTS

LIQUID ART HOUSE WIELDS AN IMAGINATIVE CULINARY PALETTE.

As a dedicated frequenter of restaurants, I have tremendous respect for the industry's entrepreneurs: The business is brutally competitive, suffers razor-thin margins and inhabits a fickle market that favors the predictable over the innovative. So give credit to the audacity of Ruta Laukien, who left a lucrative career in investment banking to open Liquid Art House, a novel combination of fine-dining restaurant and art gallery in Back Bay. She may be a novice restaurateur, but she was smart enough to hire Rachel Klein, a veteran chef whose penchant for modernist-leaning, exquisitely plated food was honed at bygone restaurants like OM and Asana.

Typical of Klein's pretty plates is a farmer's market salad ($17) that architecturally arranges red quinoa, sweet peas, pickled and charred mushroom, feta and thin slices of fatty, intense Mangalitsa ham in a semi-circle on the far side of a mostly empty plate. Asparagus ($17) is sauced with a bit of mayo-like truffle emulsion, showered with fine romano and fresh tarragon and crowned by a poached egg niftily jacketed in a crisp bread-crumb coating. Hamachi crudo ($17) is presented with almost Japanese austerity, its slips of raw yellowtail curled around papaya, black garlic, smoky lemon and ginger, each of its few bites unfolding new flavors. Handmade dumplings offer a lovely mid-course with echoes of the owner's and chef's Eastern European heritage, as in a row of small cylindrical dumplings ($16 half-order, $24 full) filled with Lithuanian farmer's cheese, their tenderly chewy mildness given perfect, piquant contrast by Brussels sprout leaves, Asian pear and grain mustard.

Entrees similarly bedeck costly central ingredients in elegant array, like roasted local scallops ($35) connected by painterly smears of sunny pomegranate gastrique and creamy labneh, spiced curry-like with vadouvan. Australian lamb loin ($39) largely lets the flavor of its all-natural meat shine in three plump, rare medallions barely sauced with roasted grapes alongside potato puree, green olives and fresh mint leaves. Customers resistant to the eye-catching charms of tweezer food can order more conventional proteins like a simply grilled 10-ounce prime, boutique-ranch skirt steak ($38) or a fabulous crisp-skinned rendition of duck confit ($17)—though the kitchen can't resist tarting up that plate with Medjool dates, aioli and blue cheese. A French rotisserie produces an extraordinary Green Circle half-chicken ($25), a heritage breed raised on vegetable scraps from five-star restaurants. It's an amazing bird, with even its breast meat tender, rich and almost faintly gamy; the accompanying chicken jus is likewise exceptional. As these plainer dishes are a la carte, you'll need a side or two, like Jack's Mămăligă ($8), a soft-polenta-like corn porridge infused with honey and sour cream and flecked with cubes of brynza, a creamy, tangy sheep's-milk cheese—another homey nod to Eastern Europe.

Brilliant pastry chef Giselle Miller's desserts alternate between mad-scientist creations, like a pastel-pretty Thai young coconut semifreddo ($14) atop crumbled tres leches cake with lemon verbena ice cream and coconut lime snow, and more sedate French-inspired classics, like dark cocoa-nib chocolate soufflé with peppermint anglaise ($16), which I imagine is what Girl Scout Thin Mints taste like in heaven.

An accumulation of fine details helps justify the steep prices, like terrific complimentary breads, including a Parker House roll that rivals the original, accented by superb cultured butter and sea salt. The cocktail program is ambitious and carefully executed, with original, complexly flavored cocktails like the Armada ($15), combining the Irish moonshine poitín with syrupy Pedro Ximnéz sherry, lemon, hawthorn-fruit essence and celery bitters. Wines by the glass are interesting and decently priced (mostly $10-$17), a good cheese plate is offered ($6 for one cut, $16 for three, $26 for five), and the check arrives with a plate of winsome little macarons. The circular bar is stunning, dominated by a dramatic Murano glass chandelier. With few exceptions, the art provides a lovely, serene backdrop to the dining rooms. But service sometimes undershoots the price point, as when a request for sequencing of a large order is unfulfilled by the kitchen, resulting in a pile of dishes awkwardly arriving at once, unnoted by the server. The occasional kitschy artist or less-than-polished waiter aside, both gallery and restaurant are probably too esoteric and pricey for most middlebrow patrons. But for aesthetes who can appreciate and afford its determinedly modern, exquisitely wrought creations, Liquid Art House offers a singular experience. ◆

ASK CHERYL

Q: I HAD TOO MUCH SUN THIS SUMMER AND I NOW HAVE SOME BROWN SUNSPOTS ON MY FACE AND CHEST. WHAT DO YOU SUGGEST TO GET RID OF THEM?

A: Brown sunspots, age spots, and freckles develop on the parts of our body that are prone to sun exposure. Luckily, these unsightly spots can be lightened or eliminated with IPL (Intense Pulsed Light) treatments.

IPL, sometimes referred to as a photo-facial, is a safe, FDA- approved method of utilizing flashes of light energy to break up the melanin that forms brown spots. The procedure is quick and there is no downtime. In addition to the face and chest, it is a great treatment for brown age spots on the hands.

IPL is an excellent choice for men and women who want beautiful, clear skin without having to cover up spots with makeup.

There are also some medical-strength home care products that can help fade brown spots. We are happy to provide a free consultation and tell you about both options.

TRACKS ★★★½

Starring Mia Wasikowska, Adam Driver, Lily Pearl, Philip Dodd, Fiona Press, Daisy Walkabout, Robert Coleby, John Flaus and Roly Mintuma. Written by Marion Nelson, based on the book by Robyn Davidson. Directed by John Curran. At Coolidge Corner, West Newton and in the suburbs.

A GIRL AND HER DOG

MIA WASIKOWSKA AND FOUR-LEGGED FRIENDS FIND A WONDERLAND IN OZ.

"IT SEEMS TO ME THE UNIVERSE GAVE US THREE gifts to make life bearable—hope, jokes and dogs," muses Robyn Davidson (Alice in Wonderland's Mia Wasikowska) in the handsome true-life travelogue Tracks. "But the greatest of these gifts," she concludes, "was dogs."

And indeed, the spare script from Marion Nelson—adapted from Davidson's 1980 memoir, itself an outgrowth of her wildly popular 1978 cover story for National Geographic—finds the willowy Australian arriving in dusty Alice Springs with nothing but her beloved black Labrador, Diggity, in tow. The year is 1975, and the restless Davidson has grown tired of both city life and her country's class system, which was still uncivil to the native Aborigines 40 years ago. She's planning a 2,000-mile journey across the Outback, which will find her walking from the Northern Territories to the Indian Ocean, accompanied only by four-legged friends. Along with Diggity, she'll be joined by a quartet of camels—Dookie, Bub, Zeleika and her son, Goliath—who will increasingly become more like 4,000-pound versions of her canine companion.

"I think you have a problem with people," observes Rick Smolan (Adam Driver of HBO's Girls), a talkative American photographer with little understanding of social cues. Still, the spectacled shutterbug is nice to a fault, so Davidson can't get too upset with him when he's assigned to capture her travels for National Geographic as a condition of the magazine's sponsorship, even if her voyage was spawned by a desire to be alone.

To assuage any fears they may have for her well-being, Rick tells Robyn's family that he'll be meeting up with her "five or six times" over the course of the journey. "Two or three times," she corrects, wary that she'll be used as a puppet to strike poses, when all she really wants to do is pull her own strings. But is that all there is to her self-imposed walkabout?

After numerous false-starts—attributed to sexism, camel troubles and difficulties in securing the funding she begrudgingly realizes she needs—Robyn sets off on April 9, 1977, and one of the chief pleasures of this emotional slow-burner is that the reasons for her trek remain elusive. That's not to say that there aren't hints: The film periodically flashes back to the gold-coated dog she had in her youth, as well as to fleeting memories surrounding her mother's suicide. We see that when her father (Robert Coleby) informed young Robyn (portrayed by Lily Pearl) of her mother's death, this was but the start of bad news. He also told her that she would be sent to live with an aunt—the family, broke, had lost their home—and that her beloved pet would be put down.

They may not speak the same language, but then, that hasn't hindered the love that Robyn shares with her animals during her picturesque travels.

But whether any of this is what pushes her to "pick up a bunch of junk, cart it 20 miles" across a scorching desert, "drop it, and then do it again" every day for more than half a year is left for us to decide.

The remarkably talented Wasikowska eerily resembles her attractive real-world counterpart (Smolan's actual photographs appear under the film's end credits). But the Australian-born actress's natural beauty has done nothing to hinder her from choosing roles that would send most Hollywood-bred starlets fleeing, from the cold-blooded sociopath she played in Park Chan-wook's flawed Stoker to her wildly antisocial turn here. Case in point: During an early rendezvous, as Rick photographs Robyn, she pulls a sand-encrusted shirt over her face, muttering to herself: "Parasite. Go away." Over the months, though, his nerdy chatter becomes tolerable—even welcome—as an occasional respite from the blistering solitude.

Sex does enter the picture, but don't think that Rick will end up a love interest. The real connection Robyn finds is a pure, uncomplicated one, formed when she's joined for 200 miles of her journey by Mr. Eddie (Roly Mintuma, a relative of the man he portrays), an Aboriginal elder who agrees to guide her through "sacred country," where women are not permitted to venture alone. They may not speak the same language, but then, that hasn't hindered the love that Robyn shares with her animals during her picturesque travels.

And what pictures! The widescreen cinematography, captured on film by Mandy Walker and inspired by Smolan's photographs, demands to be seen on the biggest screen possible; catch this one in the theater if you can.

When Robyn finally reaches her destination, she approaches the ocean with a sense of loss easily shared by anyone attuned to animals and nature. After 195 blistering days spent in the desert, the film ends underwater. The euphoric high of journey's end is tempered with loneliness and a sense of things lost. The universe may provide gifts, but its answers remain stubbornly out of reach, with some of its jokes a cruel reminder of the fragility of life. ◆

LYKKE LI

Music / Paul Robicheau

OPENING DOORS

ELECTRO-POP INGENUE GROWS INTO SYMPHONIC BALLADS OF HEARTBREAK.

BEFORE SHE MADE THE FIRST OF HER three albums, Lykke Li was a scrimping 21-year-old Swedish transplant to Brooklyn with that number three floating in her mind.

"I woke up on a couch in New York, stoned and depressed, and I was like, 'I need to go out and make a tattoo that has three lines," says Li, now 28. "I didn't know what it meant at the time, but to myself, I said, 'I have to follow this to the end.'"

She got parallel lines tattooed on her wrist, then realized that they matched trigrams of the I Ching, the ancient manual of Chinese wisdom. "I really do believe in trinity, and I believe in closing a door because only then can you walk through the next."

Li closed the door on New York, returned to Sweden and met up with Bjorn Yttling of indie-rockers Peter, Bjorn and John. Yttling produced her first two albums, Youth Novels and Wounded Rhymes, which often cushioned her coy vocals in synth and guitar hooks atop an electro-pop heartbeat. The ephemeral nature of some tracks only made the tribal empowerment tune "Get Some," with its playful line "I'm your prostitute, you gonna get some," seem more provocative.

But Li takes a more sweeping turn on her May release I Never Learn, which she co-produced with Yttling and Greg Kurstin (Kelly Clarkson, Lily Allen). The new album shifts focus to her voice in power ballads of wrenching heartache inspired by a self-instigated breakup. And that voice is writ large in Phil Spector-esque reverb that serves to broaden both her vocal breadth and emotional urgency.

"I didn't want to entertain anymore, or provoke. I just wanted to be calm—and a songwriter in its purest form."

"I wanted to step away from what I'd done before," the singer says from Seattle on the eve of a U.S. tour that brings Li and her five-piece band to House of Blues on Oct. 3. "I didn't want to entertain anymore, or provoke. I just wanted to be calm—and a songwriter in its purest form."

I Never Learn may not seem savvy for the youthful pop market, but Li says it's not about the public. "I only make it for myself, and then you have to decide whether to release it or not," she says, citing artists like Neil Young and Bob Dylan. "The people that I admire and respect and who have changed me seem to do the same thing. They're so honest that, in the process, they're able to reach other people, too, because human emotion, heartbreak and confusion are universal."

Li suggests a bit of an anti-pop star, given her penchant for black fashions (though she admits, "Because I've moved to LA, I'll put on a white shirt when no one sees me") and her introverted personality. "At the same time," Li adds, "I'm adventurous and I want to try new things, if it's eating grasshoppers in Mexico or singing a U2 song. You can't just stay in your comfort zone."

Yes, that's her singing with Bono on "The Troubles," the closing track on U2's surprise iTunes release Songs of Innocence. "I didn't even know if it would make the record or if I was still on it," she says. "People change their minds a lot."

As for the adventurous globe-trotting, it comes easily after living in places like Portugal and India with artistic parents. "It always annoyed me when people were like 'Oh, are you a musician 'cause your daddy's a musician?' No, it doesn't have anything to do with it. But I realize now that what I didn't have to fight against was parents telling me, 'Are you crazy? You can't do that. You have to get a real job.'"

Li favored dancing until age 16, when singing and writing songs took over. "I wanted to sing because, for me, it's the most spiritual thing I could be doing," she says. And with the trilogy now complete, it's her job to share. "What I did purposely on this record was I put closure to my f---ing crazy youth, my past, and I opened the door to my womanhood," she says of I Never Learn. "We'll see where it takes me." ◆

HARD TO SWALLOW

A ROUTINE ENDOSCOPY REVEALS A WHOLE NEW WORLD OF MEDICAL INDIGNITY.

I'M ABOUT HALFWAY THROUGH DINNER AT MY sister-in-law's when I realize that dinner hasn't made it to my stomach. There's a thick pressure halfway down my chest, where the chicken fajitas evidently took a detour on the way to Tummy Town. I've never had an alien burst forth from my body, but this is what I imagine it would feel like just before the slimy fanged creature tears open its cocoon and ruins the dinner party. As it is, my ensuing half hour of vurping does a pretty good job of ruining the dinner party.

This incident, the Case of the Halfway Fajitas, puts me on course for an endoscopy, where they run a camera down your gullet and have a little look-see. I'm unhappy about this on a number of levels—it's expensive and inconvenient, and the best possible outcome is that there's nothing really wrong and the whole exercise was pointless. Worst case, they find an alien parasite in my esophagus.

I deal with my impending medical appointment as I do with most unpleasantness, which is to say I completely ignore it. Thus it's to my great surprise and displeasure when I finally read the paperwork—the night before the appointment—and discover that I won't be able to take so much as a sip of water the day of the procedure. A little endoscopy advice from me to you: Schedule those for the morning, not 3 pm. By noon, I'm repeatedly approaching the faucet to fill a glass before remembering that I can't. I would be the shipwreck survivor who's drinking his own pee on day one.

At least the appointment is at a clinic rather than a hospital. Hospitals are gross and depressing and smell weird, but this clinic is just like checking into a Holiday Inn Express. There's a front desk, then you go to your room, and then you change into an assless gown. So that last part is more like a Courtyard Marriott.

Medical professionals, please tell me: Why the gown? If I'm getting a camera run down my throat, why must I wear a rumpled housedress that's distinctly drafty around the buttock region? I feel like it's just to take you down a notch, to remind you that, for the next couple of hours, you're a science experiment. Here's your numbered bracelet; here's your morgue couture. Now get on the table, you ol' meat bucket.

Maybe I'm being dramatic, but this is all new to me. I've never had an IV, never had anesthesia, never had oxygen tubes jammed in my nostrils. Those streaks are all about to end.

It's a TV cliche, but once I'm hooked to the IV and the oxygen, I can think of nothing but tearing them out and heading for the nearest door, the nurses pursuing me saying, "Sir! SIR!" But I am an obedient patient, so instead I wait to be wheeled into a different room, passing fellow decrepits in the hallway heading to and fro on our mobile beds. An old lady and I nod at each other, as if to say, "What are you in for?" while my bed-pusher waits for her bed-pusher to clear the intersection. I really wish I'd taken more time chewing that chicken fajita.

In the next room I meet the doctors. The anesthesiologist introduces himself as Rocky, and I make a joke about how he'll sedate me by just punching me in the face. Or maybe that comment never escapes my internal monologue—I'm feeling kind of woozy. The GI doc comes in and explains what she'll be up to, which makes me really glad that Rocky's going first. He's going to inject me with propofol, after which I won't care if there's a camera down my insides. Hopefully he's better at judging the dosage than Dr. Conrad Murray was with Michael Jackson. I'm 90 percent sure I keep that comment to myself.

The anesthesiologist introduces himself as Rocky, and I make a joke about how he'll sedate me by just punching me in the face.

At the appointed moment, Rocky informs me I'm about to feel the anesthesia hitting, and boy is he right. Ironically, anesthesia is quite painful in the moments before it knocks you out. It's a searing pressure going into my hand, like the vein is stretching beyond capacity, and it's all I can do to maintain my remaining shred of dignity by not screaming "Ouchieouchouch!" as I go under. Instead, I keep it to a manly "Hrrrggghhh" before darkness descends. People who say that anesthesia is like taking a nap must take some pretty brutal naps.

When I wake up, the news is good. Which is to say, I likely have a mysterious allergy that impedes swallowing, and the best solution is to eat somewhat slower than a starving hyena. As my buddy Millman says, it's when you reach your 30s that you start to have things wrong with you that they don't bother fixing. So then, time to enjoy the simple pleasure of a drink of water. And a pair of pants. ◆

WHINE AND DINE

SOUND ADVICE ON DINNER PARTIES, THREESOMES AND CADS WHO CAN'T COMMIT

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is the Boston Globe No. 1 best-seller No One Ever Told Us That, a collection of letters with life lessons for his grandchildren. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

My significant other and I are getting into the groove of hosting dinner parties for our friends and family. While we really do enjoy their company, and try to prepare dishes for everyone's palate, we always seem to have one picky eater in the group who will complain no matter what we've made. As a host, how do you air your frustrations without offending the guest? There are certain things that should be run by a benevolent dictator, not by a committee. Country clubs are one, and dinner parties are another. You are doing people a favor by having them to your home and providing dinner, stimulating conversation and the kind of intimate atmosphere that people really enjoy. If I were invited somewhere and had a peanut allergy, I would tell my host in advance. And if the host provided a protein, a starch and a veggie, and I didn't like the taste of one of them, I would work around it and not be rude to my hosts. The art of a great dinner party is in picking the company, not the food. If you have a pain in the neck on your list, cross them off.

I have been dating this guy for 25-plus years. We have two kids, ages 24 and 17. Each year that goes by, I hear the tick-tock of the wedding bells clock, but he has so many excuses, from marriage tax penalties to the expense of a wedding. His attitude is "I gave you kids—what more do you want?" I have given up on this relationship and wonder if I would ever find someone at my age (46). I am not sure how to meet interesting men who would find me attractive. My confidence is shattered, and it makes me sad to see co-workers and friends celebrating love and life with someone special. I wonder what I have been doing wrong. I keep myself fixed up—hair, nails and clothes. I work hard and played by the rules of being in a relationship, but feel like I have been robbed all these years. I do not know what to do. Any advice would be greatly appreciated. I think the sell-by date has long expired on this one. I really understand that in American society today you can't even define relationships anymore. But I think you can define happiness or unhappiness. I often seem to be asking people, "Where is it written that you can't try to make yourself happy? There is certainly a case to be made for marriage being cheaper than single life, but your boyfriend's financial objections to marriage are not the real point. Your boyfriend is happier being single—period. You are still plenty young enough, and your children are plenty old enough to handle you breaking up with their father. (Although if you live together, there may be legal complications that go with the common-law marriage concept. Check it out.) As for attracting other men, it sounds as if you are making efforts to keep yourself fit and attractive. And since there are at least a million kinds of love, my guess is that you would find at least several varieties that appeal to you. If you want one more try at keeping your long-term friend, give him a one-month ultimatum to "put up or shut up," and stick to it. Just like finally selling a stock that's bothered you for a long time, when you finally hit the "sell" button, it can be a relief.

It seems like everyone I know is on my case about having a baby. I'm 29 and newly married, but it's not on our radar at the moment. How can I get them to back off? Everyone else has the answers for us, and often never seem to have the right answers for themselves. Having babies—or not—is something only you can decide with your partner. Everybody else's opinion, in my view, is worthless. Primal urges are primal urges, and other people's experiences with children certainly could be completely different from yours. Never look back and say, "I woulda, shoulda, coulda." Whatever your decision, you can not put the blame or the credit on anyone else. I like to defuse rudeness or well-meaning curiosity with some humor. That lets others know the discussion is over. I'd say, "Everyone knows that the stork brings babies. I'm leaving the decision to the stork." They'll get the message.

I attend an elite university, but I have no motivation to go to class or work toward a degree because I'd rather go right into the workforce and start earning money as opposed to accumulating debt from college loans. My parents (who pay for my education) disagree, arguing that a degree will help me in the long run. What is more valuable: experience or education? In my opinion, the education at college takes place not in the classroom, but from 10 at night till 2 in the morning with your peers. Unfortunately, we never stop being judged by others. And in various times of judgment—job interviews, club admissions, etc.—questions will inevitably rise about your college education. There are certain things that the adult world expects from us, and today, one of them is a college degree. As time goes on, your experience will keep building and forming you in so many ways. If you pay attention, one of those greatest experiences will be a college education. Stay the course.

A friend's boyfriend wants to bring another woman into their bedroom. She's amenable to it but wants to make sure it's a person they're both comfortable with and attracted to. Any advice for navigating this situation? First of all, it's you, isn't it? Not some friend. Short-term fantasy fulfillment can certainly be exciting, but I bet if you venture into it, it will end in tears—especially if you're merely amenable. In relationships, be careful of having images stuck in your brain that can come back to haunt you. But you'll never really know until you try something yourself. My parents told me I'd love mushrooms, that they'd be my favorite. But I hate mushrooms. ◆

Soroff On / Joe Perry

ROCK ROYALTY

THE AEROSMITH GUITARIST RIFFS OF HIS NEW BOOK, COMPOSING FOR TV AND STEVEN TYLER'S STYLE.

AEROSMITH GUITARIST JOE PERRY, 64, DISCUSSES HIS NEW memoir Rocks: My Life In and Out of Aerosmith on Oct. 9 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre. Born in Lawrence and raised in Hopedale, Perry picked up the guitar at an early age and never put it down. As teenagers, he and bassist Tom Hamilton formed the Jam Band, which morphed into Aerosmith with the addition of Steven Tyler, Brad Whitford and Joey Kramer. During the past 40 years, Aerosmith has had one of the most impressive roller-coaster rides in music, complete with rehab, rumors and success upon success, including four Grammys and induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. His other endeavors include solo and charitable work, film and TV scoring and even a line of BBQ sauces. He has four sons with whom he often collaborates, and he and his wife, Billie, divide their time between Massachusetts, Vermont, Florida and California.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So how much of the book did you actually write?
JOE PERRY: When we got the original manuscript back from David Ritz, there were certain pages with incidents or anecdotes where I had to take pen to paper and rewrite them, because it would've taken twice as long to explain. So there are parts that I wrote myself, but David's talent is to write so that it sounds like me talking, and I'd be hard-pressed to pick out those parts. It was definitely a collaboration, and we went through the editing process at least four times.

What did you leave out? A lot. But once we'd settled on the format and the outline, I kind of stopped trying to remember things, and there is stuff that I've remembered since that I'm putting down on paper. Hopefully, it'll end up in the paperback. But the bottom line is that there are certain things I decided were out of bounds. What goes on between me and Steven in particular, and among all the members of the band, runs really deep. Certain things I left out, just out of good taste. There's also a lot that I put in with some trepidation about how the guys are going to take it, most specifically Steven. On our current tour, it became kind of a joke. Whenever Steven and I would get into it, I'd say, "Careful. I'm working on my book."

So is Aerosmith "America's greatest rock 'n' roll band"? Some nights, I think we are. And then there are other nights when I don't. To me, a rock 'n' roll band is a fusion of the fans and the musicians, so I base it on the live performance aspect. That's why when we go out there and play the same songs we've played so many times before, we give it as much as we can. We play "Dream On" with everything we've got, because someone in the audience might only be hearing it live that one time. That's foremost in my mind. And some nights are like magic; some nights, things don't come together that way. But we're lucky, because we have a pretty well-loaded set list to work with, and a few other things going for us that would put us firmly in the "yes" pile.

"It became kind of a joke. Whenever Steven and I would get into it, I'd say, 'Careful. I'm working on my book.'"

How do five substantial egos avoid constantly fighting? By keeping our own space. Everybody goes their own way when we walk off stage. There are times when I won't see anybody else in the band until five minutes before we go on. Then there's other times when we'll hang around together for a day or two, or go out to dinner. I'm pretty much the loner and always have been. In fact, I travel on the bus as much as I can instead of the band plane with everybody else, so I can have time away. That way, when we're on stage, it's a lot of fun.

What's the biggest honor of your career—Grammy, Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, Songwriters Hall of Fame... I'm most proud when I hear from fans, "I picked up the guitar because I heard your record," or "You guys saved my life when I heard you got sober." Those other things are nice, but the really amazing part is when you realize you've touched people.

Who belongs in the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame but isn't? Cheap Trick. They've been together longer than we have. They tour all the time. They're one of the best live bands. They've got great songs. Why aren't they in there? There are other artists that are great who are, but they're really not rock 'n' roll, or haven't made as much of an impact.

What draws you to doing instrumental work for movies and television? The challenge. Never having done that kind of work until relatively recently, it was interesting to write within certain parameters. It's just totally different. It has to be done in 29 and a half seconds, and it has to include certain elements. It's interesting to work within those kinds of guidelines, and coming up with music that furthers the plot or tells the story is really interesting to me.

Favorite duet or guest appearance? Off the top of my head, playing with Tom Jones at the concert for Princess Diana. That was so incredible—80,000 people at Wembley Stadium. It was quite a rush.

Biggest misconception about Aerosmith? There are a lot of them, and that's one of the reasons I wrote the book. The legends we've carried with us, and the shadows that follow us, some are so twisted that I just wanted to set the record straight. The biggest thing is how hard it is to keep the band together as we've grown older. That's probably the hardest thing to figure out and talk about. This book is really about human nature and getting past insurmountable odds. You don't have to be an Aerosmith fan, or even a rock 'n' roll fan, to get something from this book.

Should there be a mandatory retirement age for rock stars? That's really a pact between the fans and the performer. If he's just going out and phoning it in for the money, the fans will know. It becomes self-evident. So there is a point when it isn't fun for the artist and he's not giving the fans what they're coming to see.

So who's better dressed: you or Steven? [Laughs] I think that depends on what you use as your benchmark. What's your definition of well-dressed: more colorful, or does it fit? ◆

A DEFINITIVE GUIDE TO BOSTON PIZZA

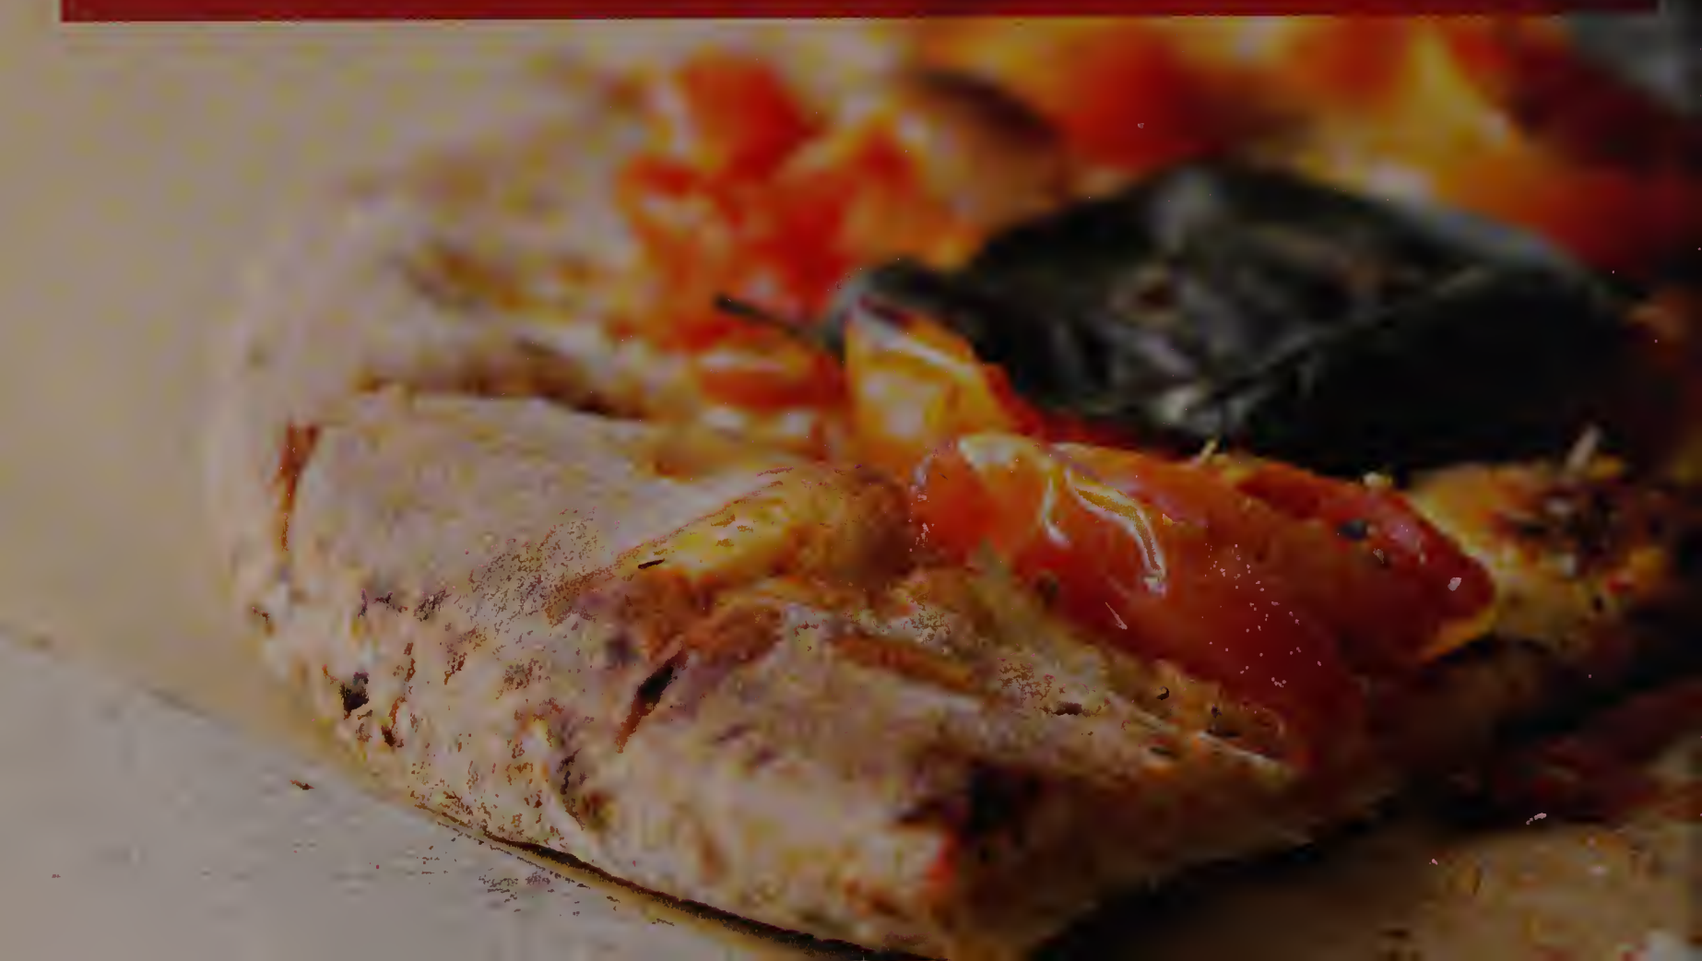
A CERTIFIED TREND

In Naples, you can find sublime pizza on practically every corner. Boston's not quite there yet, but Neapolitan-style pies are currently hotter than the 900-degree ovens that cook them, having popped up on menus all across town. And some local chefs—including Joseph Cassinelli of Somerville's Posto, Giuseppe Castellano of Cambridge's Gran Gusto and Todd Winer of Fort Point's Pastoral—have gone through an official certification process in hopes of rising above a competitive field.

If you talk to Winer for more than a few minutes, you can tell that the lessons of his Associazione Verace Pizza Napoletana certification course have been burned into his memory. The two weeks of 10-hour days not only schooled him in pizza history and theory, but left him enamored with what makes the Neapolitan approach unique: the dough. Winer recalls "stacks and piles of dough," made a day in advance with a special mixer and left unrefrigerated for 24 hours. When it's finally cooked, the carbon dioxide in the dough expands rapidly over a rolling fire. The resulting crust is light and airy on the outside and dense in the middle. "It's so light and fluffy. You can eat lots of it, and you won't feel full," Winer says. "[The certifiers'] biggest concern is that pizza is becoming too bastardized, and if you're going to say it's Neapolitan pizza, they want to make sure it's Neapolitan."



Castellano hardly needed any certification, since he hails from Naples, but the recently renovated Gran Gusto does have the stamp of approval from Ospitalità Italiana, a different certification from the Italian Chamber of Commerce. "It's kind of fast food. It's made in 90 seconds, but it's a high-quality product," Castellano says. "All the ingredients are from Naples. The buffalo mozzarella is from Italy. The plum tomatoes are from Navole."

"It's kind of fast food. It's made in 90 seconds, but it's a high-quality product."

Those ingredients, which also include finely ground double-zero flour from Naples for the dough, can be challenging to obtain. "It's almost Mafia-esque tracking them down," Winer jokes. But the complex sourcing shows a dedication to the style, says Cassinelli, who opened Posto four years ago. Not only is he himself certified by the AVPN, but the restaurant has also been certified as a pizzeria, after submitting a video recording of the pizza-making process and passing an in-person walkthrough, among other hurdles.

"It's a different style, but I happen to love it," he says. "The way it cooks at a high temperature, all the natural oils come out and you can really capture the essence of the basic ingredients. It's not a style that you need to load up as a meat lovers' pizza."

After four years of making Neapolitan pizza, Cassinelli has seen his customers—who initially loved it or hated it—warm up to the style. "The challenge is getting people to understand it," he says. "Part of it is spreading awareness, and it's great that chefs are trying to incorporate it into their restaurants. I think you're going to continue to see a trend toward this."

MEET THE MASSIVE OVENS BEHIND SOME FAVORITE PIZZAS

A4 Pizza

In opening his second iteration of Area Four—A4 Pizza in Somerville—chef Jeff Pond made the move from a mechanized wood-gas hybrid oven to a decidedly simpler one, a wood-fired oven from Maine Wood Heat. "They're just craftsmen...they're intellectual about how they approach it," Pond says of the father-son team that made it. The egg-shaped design, small mouth and high-arched dome keep the 700-degree temp consistent as it cooks five pizzas at a go for about three-and-a-half minutes. The goods didn't come cheap—$64,000 for the oven and ventilation—but Pond says the expense was worth it. "What you come to learn with ovens," he says, is that "the ones that are built by hand, they have sort of a soul to them."

Lincoln Tavern

Pizza isn't the only dish to come out of the EarthStone wood-fired oven at Lincoln Tavern. When he's not filling it with four pies at a time, chef Nicholas Dixon cooks up orders of chicken wings, and he's also been known to use the oven's high temperature for meat. (The stone hits 800 degrees, while the dome can get up to 1,200.) "I can get a beautiful, hard sear on a steak, and I feel like it's a thousand times better than a grilled steak," he says. Versatility is almost to be expected from this oven, whose design originated 50 years ago for bread baking and makes for what Dixon calls a "puffy, artisanal-style pizza."

Quattro

Made using sand from Mount Vesuvius, the Marra Forni brick oven at Quattro churns out upward of 400 pizzas every day. "It's the real Neapolitan pizza that you would eat in downtown Naples," owner Frank DePasquale says. The North End restaurant's certified Neapolitan oven cooks three pies at a time for 1 minute and 20 seconds, and the high 700- to 900-degree temperature range works wonders on the raw sauce. DePasquale explains, "When the sauce mixes with the fior de latte, which is a form of mozzarella...it becomes the perfect pizza."

Max and Leo's

A day for the EarthStone coal-fired pizza oven at Max and Leo's Artisan Pizza starts before the sun comes up, usually at around 6 am, when a kitchen staffer begins the four-hour process of getting the temperature to 850 degrees. Once the coals are hot, the 8,000-pounder can cook four pies at a time, which must be rotated every 15 seconds for the perfect char. The process is labor-intensive and the personality finicky, but co-owner Max Candidus says, "The advantages are easy—coal cooks with less moisture than any other fuel source." That means pies that are crispy outside and tender inside, but the oven also turns out other menu offerings, like Candidus' favorite: coal-fired nachos that can be capped with any of the restaurant's 40 pizza toppings.

PRO TIP

PREPARATION IS KEY. If you plan to serve pizza for dinner, make the dough in the morning, let it rise, punch it down and put it in the fridge for the day. Also try to prepare your sauce, grate your cheese and slice your toppings in advance.

The PERFECT PIE

Building THE ULTIMATE PIZZA, one SLICE AT a TIME

Plenty of local pizzerias serve up traditional American slices, but for "a true taste of Alsace," sample Brasserie Jo's tarte flambée. The French regional specialty is known for topping a thin crust with fromage blanc and gruyère; in one variation, chef Nicholas Calias adds blue cheese, walnuts and apples. Once the cheese melts for 6-8 minutes in the small stone oven, the flatbread is topped with fresh parsley. Keep an eye out for an upcoming Toulouse sausage and mushroom addition.

The Salty Pig originally placed this eponymous slice on its menu to serve cured meats it was featuring in other dishes, but pizza lovers are eating it up. "It's become so popular that we actually have to order meats now specifically for the pizza," chef Kevin O'Donnell says. You might see selections like mortadella, salame genovese and prosciutto cotto paired with whole-grain mustard, crème fraiche, parmesan, baby arugula and pale ale caramel.

130 DARTMOUTH ST., BOSTON (617-536-6200) THESALTYPIG.COM

During the course of chef Lydia Shire's career, a pizza oven in the restaurant has meant a lobster pie on the menu. She makes no exception at Scampo, serving up aged and hand-stretched dough topped with garlic, shallots, lobster cream, ricotta salata, parmigiano reggiano, scallions and, of course, the signature shellfish—a no-brainer for the Brookline native. "It obviously makes sense to have a lobster pizza in New England, where our lobster tastes the best," she says.

The only thing better than beer-and-pizza night is beer-on-pizza night. That's exactly what you'll find when you belly up to the bar at Woody's Grill & Tap, a neighborhood joint that uses Guinness, plus molasses and spices, to sauce its Jamaican Jerk pizza. It's also topped with Gouda, grilled chicken and onions before cooking in the wood-fired oven at a toasty 550 degrees and coming out ready to pair with the perfect pint.

58 HEMENWAY ST., BOSTON (617-375-9663) WOODYSBOSTON.COM

Carla and Christine Pallotta's North End childhood inspires many of Nebo's menu items, but the sense of nostalgia especially rings true in the waterfront restaurant's prosciutto e fichi pizza. "As kids, our mother never made us traditional peanut butter and jelly—it was always mascarpone and fig jam," Christine says. On this slice, a crispy, traditional Roman crust lays under a heap of mozzarella, gorgonzola dolce, housemade fig jam and prosciutto.

The age-old dilemma of how to order pizza for a party full of vegetarians and meat lovers may have at last been solved by a food truck. Stoked Wood Fire Pizza Co.'s Buffalo Brussels Sprouts pizza could be renamed The Peacekeeper, satisfying everyone with hand-pulled Brussels sprout leaves, a slightly sweet Buffalo sauce, garlic, caramelized onions and a mozzarella-romano-gorgonzola cheese trifecta. "This pizza is a vegetarian pizza that meat-centric eaters rave about," owner Scott Riebling says.

It's always summertime at Coppa, where a favorite pie marries New England seafood and Italian tradition. Fried calamari, fried hot cherry peppers and a drizzle of lemon aioli top tomato sauce and a combo of mozzarella and Parmesan for the Sicilian Fisherman's pizza, which is cooked Neapolitan-style in a wood-fired oven. "This creates a charred, crispy, thin crust pizza that still has some great chew to it," says chef de cuisine Meghann Ward.

PRO TIP DON'T BUY A PIZZA STONE unless you really like making pizza. Instead, use an upside-down cookie sheet, placed in the middle of the oven.

DEEP DISH

Phil Dumontet knows a thing or two about pizza delivery. In 2009, he founded food delivery service DASHED, which has since expanded from Boston to six other cities. Today, DASHED deliverers drive smart cars and Dumontet's days on the streets are behind him, but early on, he personally shuttled pizzas (among other orders) around town on his bike. We tapped him for inside dirt on delivery.

What's the weirdest thing that ever happened when you were out on a delivery? More embarrassing than weird: On the first order we received, I dropped the customer's bottle of chianti, right as she was answering the door. There was no excuse and nothing I could do but apologize profusely. Fortunately, she was incredibly understanding, and I notice she still orders from us regularly.

Worst thing that you ever experienced on a delivery? Customers who answer the door wearing nothing. They sheepishly hide behind the door with an outreached hand to collect the food, but it doesn't always work.

What's the strangest request a customer ever had? "Please add lots of extra green peppers to my garden salad. It's for my iguana."

Biggest tip you ever got? I remember the largest was $100 for carrying multiple 30-packs of Bud Light up to a fifth-floor walk-up. The tip was as big as the order.

Most memorable thing a customer ever said to you? "Want to come in?"

What's the best part of being a delivery guy? And the worst? I love the exercise. Riding my bike around the city, looking for the fastest routes and trying to improve my times was a blast—like a real-life video game or competitive sport. The worst was delivering during heavy storms on my bike. Unsurprisingly, this is when [it's] busiest, so you'd make the most money delivering, but the fun of riding isn't there.

What's your best advice for a newly minted pizza deliverer? Don't forget how happy you're making someone by delivering their dinner. For those 45 minutes the customer waits for you to arrive, you are the most important person in the world to them.

Who's The BIG CHEESE?

SAVORY SHOWDOWNS TO CHEW ON

Winner Breakfast Pizza VS. Dessert Pizza

Breakfast is the most important meal of the day, and at least for the purposes of this issue, pizza is the most important of all the food groups. Breakfast pizza is like a warm hug to ease you into your day, and around town you'll find the classic eggs-and-bakey base topped with everything from Parmesan and truffle at Foundry on Elm to creamy spinach at Russell House. Any way you slice it, you're going to have a good morning. BONUS: Any leftover pizza can be breakfast pizza when you eat it cold, in your pajamas, the morning after.

Sorry, chocolate lovers. We love a pan full of empty calories as much as the next guy, but as intoxicating as it is at first bite, dessert pizza can be just a little too much. Often careening from guilty pleasure territory straight into the wilds of sugar overload, most dessert pizzas are simply trying too hard. Marshmallows, caramel AND peanut butter swirls? Pass the cheese, please.

Santarpio's Winner VS. Regina's

We'll admit, this was a tough call. The merits of both these Boston 'za legends are as varied as a pie with everything on it, don't hold the anchovies. However, we've got to give the golden pepperoni to Santarpio's, an Eastie mainstay since longer than anyone on the Improper staff has been alive, serving up no-frills, no-pretentions pizza that could actually cut the mustard, er, tomato sauce, for any New Yawker who wandered in.

No disrespect to Regina's though. We would never say no to a slice from the beloved North End joint, which is similarly no-frills (with the exception of the craft beer list). They score points for a more varied menu, with interesting—and high-quality—toppings, and an old-school pizzeria vibe (though not quite as old-school as the deliciously divey Santarpio's).

Bagel Pizza VS. English Muffin Pizza Winner

No, we're not talking Bagel Bites. (They're admittedly addictive, but also burn the roof of your mouth. Every. Single. Time.) We're talking homemade bagel pizzas. The good stuff, though not quite as good as its English muffin brethren. Bagel pizza, like deep dish, is just way too crust heavy. All that dough throws off the delicate dance of sauce, cheese and spices, taking center stage like a starchy spotlight hog. Not cool, bagel.

Two words: nooks and crannies. So many crispy, crusty alcoves in which our toppings can canoodle, meeting in a perfectly balanced union.

Sober Pizza VS. Winner Drunk Pizza

Honestly, there's never a wrong time—or state of inebriation—for pizza. Pizza is always delicious. Even when pizza is bad, pizza is good.

BUT. Everything tastes better drunk. And pizza? Eating pizza drunk is the intoxicated dining equivalent of riding through clouds made of rainbows and kittens on the back of a unicorn who delivers pizza in 10 minutes or less. Hence the lines of sauced 20-somethings snaking out of the North End's Caffé Pompeii, Allston's Bravo, Brookline's Pino's and Back Bay's Little Steve's, all bar-adjacent and open late.

Winner Thin Crust VS. Deep Dish

Obviously.

Go back to Chicago with that noise. Da bears.

Super Mario

Celebrity chef Mario Batali's first taste of transcendent pizza crust took place at Pizzeria di Matteo in Naples. "It was the first in my memory to achieve a crunch and a bagel-like pull," Batali says.

He aims for that effect in his own Italian cuisine, which has wowed New Yorkers for almost two decades. This winter, Boston will finally get a slice of the action when Batali opens Babbo Pizzeria at Fan Pier. The Italian restaurant will feature a first-come, first-served pizza bar wrapped around a wood-burning oven. "We've been hoping to open in Boston for years," says the former star of Molto Mario. "It's an exciting market and a fun town."

So what's Batali's favorite pizza? "I like marinara — and that means no cheese. ... When you get away from the white noise of cheese, the bread takes on a whole new personality."

To please the cheese-loving crowd, however, Batali offers up his pizza Margherita recipe.

MARIO BATALI'S Pizza Margherita

FROM ITALIAN GRILL • MAKES 4 PIZZAS

INGREDIENTS:

- Pizza dough
- 1 cup simple tomato sauce (preferably Pomi strained tomatoes)
- 8 ounces fresh mozzarella, thinly sliced
- 1/4 cup extra-virgin olive oil
- 24 fresh basil leaves
- Coarse sea salt

DIRECTIONS:

- Prepare a gas or charcoal grill for indirect grilling.
- Divide the dough into 4 pieces and shape each one into a ball. Let rest for 15 minutes, loosely covered with a tea towel or plastic wrap.
- Using a floured rolling pin or your hands, stretch each ball into a 9- to 10-inch round (the shape doesn't have to be perfect).
- Carefully lay one round of dough over the hottest part of the grill and cook for about 2 minutes, until the bottom is lightly browned and dry.
- Using tongs, gently lift up the dough, flip over and cook for 30 seconds. Transfer the dough to a baking sheet, with the less-cooked side up. Repeat with the remaining dough rounds. Let cool.
- Divide the sauce among the partially cooked pizzas, using the back of a kitchen spoon to spread it evenly to within a half-inch of the edges of the dough. Divide the cheese among the pizzas.
- Place 1 or 2 pizzas at a time on the cooler part of the grill and cook for about 2 minutes, until the cheese is melted and the bottoms are crisp and golden brown.
- Transfer to a cutting board and drizzle with a little olive oil. Scatter 6 torn basil leaves over each pizza and sprinkle with coarse sea salt.
- Cut into slices with a pizza wheel and serve hot.

PRO TIP

ADD THE TOPPINGS AND CHEESE just before you start baking a pizza, unless it's a pie with a lot of toppings, in which case you may want to give the dough and sauce a few minutes in the oven first.

Happy ENDINGS

A CHOCOLATE-FREE TRAWL THROUGH SOME OF THE CITY'S OUTSTANDING DESSERTS.

By Andrew Rimas

PHOTOGRAPHED BY JILLIAN MEDUGNO

Chocolate is

A SUBJECT THAT MAKES FOOD WRITERS GROPE, WITH SWEATING FINGERS, FOR THEIR THESAURI. THERE'S MUCH FANNING OF THE NECK IN DESCRIPTIONS OF CHOCOLATE'S EARTH AND SPICE, ITS POWER TO SEDUCE. CHOCOLATE MELTS AT BODY HEAT; IT DOESN'T COAT AN OBJECT, IT ENROBES IT. I DON'T THINK ANYONE WOULD BE SURPRISED IF THERE WERE 50 SHADES OF COCOA BEANS.

Chocolate is, frankly, a tart. There's a world of sweet pleasures in other, less obvious flavor palettes. Cream and fruit, brown sugar and pumpkin—these are the wallflowers, often ignored while chocolate splays across the plate in a lurid ganache.

In tribute to them, here are five exceptional, non-chocolate standouts from some of the best pastry chefs in town.

Rosemary-cranberry kouign-amann AT HARVEST

A CLASSIC FRENCH DISH OF LAYERED, LAMINATED DOUGH AND BUTTER,

the kouign-amann is a grander relative of the Danish or elephant ear. Brian Mercury's version is an homage to early fall. "I'm ready for the weather, but not the flavors," he says. "So it's not heavy on cinnamon or nutmeg. I'm still enjoying the fresh fruit of the summer." Caramelized on the crust, the pastry's velvet inside is complemented by homemade buttermilk ice cream and enlivened with a pear and cranberry compote. A touch of rosemary in the dough lends freshness, while the cranberry is rounded out with notes of red wine and orange. "It's perfect to eat with coffee," observes Mercury. "It's not tooth-hurting, and is very approachable."

Baked Alaska AT CATALYST

"ICE CREAM IS MY FAVORITE THING, HANDS DOWN,"

Nicole Harrington says. "Because you can get weird with flavors." And ice cream, more than the torched meringue shell or the soft cake underbelly, is the cold, delicious heart of this, the dessert menu's answer to the armadillo. Harrington uses brown sugar and cinnamon ice cream on top of spongy pumpkin cake. Many Alaskas suffer from a crystalline freeze, but this one is timed perfectly for texture, so the elements remain cleanly separate until their flavors meld on the palate. The cinnamon lends a nip of heat to the mellow pumpkin and brown sugar, and a salted caramel drizzle enlivens the airy meringue. It's an exquisite, seasonal reinterpretation of a classic.

WITH SHEEP'S MILK YOGURT PANNA COTTA AT LEGAL HARBORSIDE

"THIS IS NOT FOR SOMEONE LOOKING FOR SOMETHING TOO SWEET,"

says Kristin Wilson, a veteran of Hamersley's Bistro, Grill 23 & Bar, the Boston Harbor Hotel and other famous kitchens. She prepares the fruit soup by steeping rhubarb stalks in water and sugar, then boils them to release the pectin "so it's not jiggly in the bowl." After it's strained, she cools it and pours it around a panna cotta made with Old Chatham sheep's milk yogurt from the Hudson Valley. "A lot of people use Greek, but this gives it more tang," she says. The result is a vibrant dish, lightly touched with honey. And it's gluten free.

Blueberry pistachio coupe AT BAR BOULUD

THE CITY'S NEWEST CELEBRITY restaurant aspires to be a hot spot for locals as much as for guests at the Mandarin Oriental. Hence this elevated sundae, which dabbles in regional flavors through a Continental prism. "You begin by breaking through the crisp tuile at the top, diving deeper into the softness of the ice cream," says Robert Differ. Served in a round, stemless glass, it's composed of layers of blueberry ice cream and light lemon curd rooted in an intense blueberry compote. Fruit is dominant—the adorning blueberries are as juicy as grapes—while cubes of cornmeal biscuit give it texture, anchoring the dish in New England.

Breakfast for dessert AT BERGAMOT

DECONSTRUCTED DESSERTS have been in vogue for some time, but the concept reaches new heights of wit in Kelcey Rusch's version of a complete breakfast. The dish lacks bacon, sadly, but it's a clever play on fruit and oatmeal. "I built the plate around the honeydew sorbet," Rusch says. Dollops of blueberry yogurt and coconut meringue accent the cool melon, while hibiscus-raspberry jelly adds a stripe of color. The flavors are grounded by crunchy ginger-maple granola (slightly salted for counter point) and a soft swathe of blended honey and cream oatmeal. "It's light and bright," Rusch says. "I'm not a fan of heavy, dark desserts." Indeed, the combined tastes skirt the line of wholesomeness, but the result is a masterwork in texture and balance.

Sounds Good

Awards season kicks off.

'TIS THE SEASON TO CELEBRATE the best of this city's music scene. The nominations for the 2014 Boston Music Awards—the annual awards show and kick-ass party that gives due cred to local artists who've done big things during the past year—will be announced on Oct. 4. This year, however, BMA voting kicks off with another party: the first annual Sound of Our Town, a music festival at the Lawn on D, a new interactive arts space in South Boston. The free all-day fest, presented in part by online music mag Vanyaland and local nonprofit Music Drives Us, features a stacked lineup of talent, including Dutch ReBelle, Speedy Ortiz, Quilt, Hooray for Earth, Eli "Paperboy" Reed, Parks, the Grownup Noise and the Both (aka Aimee Mann and Ted Leo, pictured here), along with DJ sets, booze and likely a few surprises. Did we mention it's free? This year's BMA contenders will be announced at the festival, and voting will commence on the spot. Heads up: Live voting at the event will be weighted more heavily than online voting, so get out there and make your voice heard. / Alexandra Cavallo

THERE WILL BE BLOOD

Sometimes the customer is better off not knowing what's in that "secret sauce." Such is the case in Sweeney Todd: The Demon Barber of Fleet Street, Stephen Sondheim's Tony-winning musical, which follows a barber out for revenge after spending 15 years in a penal colony for crimes he didn't commit. As it turns out, Todd's bloodlust isn't limited to the crooked judge who imprisoned him—he cuts more throats than hair in the makeshift barbershop he sets up above his twisted mistress's meat pie shop. People are going missing, but it's hard to be bothered when Mrs. Lovett's pies have gotten so very tasty of late. Leave the kids at home for this darkly funny thriller, which runs through Oct. 11 at the Lyric Stage Company. / Alexandra Cavallo PHOTO: MARK S. HOWARD

TOTAL ZERO And here you thought your workload was tough. In Terry Gilliam's new sci-fi film The Zero Theorem—the culmination of a dystopian trilogy that began with Brazil and continued with 12 Monkeys—socially inept computer genius Qohen Leth has been tasked with one helluva deliverable: solving a formula that will determine whether life has meaning. While facing down the alarming possibility that everything amounts to nothing, he also has two major distractions to contend with: a lusty femme fatale and the teenage son of his Big Brother boss, who keep paying him visits. Watch it all add up at the local premiere on Oct. 10 at the Brattle Theatre. / Kim Lester

Reviews by Brett Michel

The Boxtrolls ★★★ Based on Alan Snow's children's novel Here Be Monsters!, this latest handcrafted marvel from the stop-motion animators at Laika studios is a darkly twisted look at the goings-on of the incredibly expressive inhabitants of Cheesebridge and their quirky counterparts who live underground: cave-dwelling trash collectors known as Boxtrolls. Mischievous creatures, they've raised an orphaned human boy named Eggs (voiced by Game of Thrones' Isaac Hempstead-Wright), a pawn in a convoluted plot hatched by the town's Mr. Creosote-like exterminator, Archibald Snatcher (Academy Award winner Ben Kingsley), to rid the land of these misunderstood, gibberish-spewing "monsters." How exactly Eggs has developed his Queen's English vocabulary is a mystery best not contemplated. Be sure to stay during the end credits for a behind-the-curtain look at some of the film's production art, plus a wonderfully self-referential sequence contemplating the existential link between the characters and their creators; if the rest of the movie had been half as clever, this might have stood as a worthy successor to Laika's ParaNorman and Coraline. As is, directors Anthony Stacchi and Graham Annable have created something that's merely better than most live-action productions. What nerve! (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Boyhood ★★★1/2 With his landmark trilogy—1995's Before Sunrise, 2004's Before Sunset and last year's Before Midnight—writer/director Richard Linklater has spent 18 years tracking the lives of two lovers (Julie Delpy and Ethan Hawke), checking in with them at nine-year intervals. With his latest extended-storytelling experiment, an epic chronicle of childhood's mundane moments filmed over 12 years, Linklater finds the poetry in growing up. When we meet Mason Evans Jr. (played by newcomer Ellar Coltrane from ages 6 to 18), he's a cute little moppet going about everyday kid stuff. But Linklater's not interested in an idyllic Norman Rockwell portrait. Mason's part of a fractured family, held together by his mom (Patricia Arquette, never better). Humorous signifiers act as time capsules, buried throughout the film to clue us into the year of the action. Some of these signposts are quite literal: By the end of W's second term, Mason Sr. (Hawke) has his son planting Obama signs on neighborhood lawns—while uprooting McCain posters. It's just one of life's little moments that makes this 2 hour and 46 minute film move so effortlessly fast. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Calvary ★★★★ "I first tasted semen when I was 7 years old." Thus is the first of many memorable lines in writer/director John Michael McDonagh's moving, darkly comic sophomore film—one spoken in a brogue by an unseen man sitting opposite Father James Lavelle (the great Brendan Gleeson) inside the confessional of a sleepy Irish fishing village. "It's certainly a startling opening line," responds the priest, before this lost sheep continues his tale of being raped by a member of the clergy—and shares his intention to exact murderous revenge in a week's time upon the innocent Lavelle, a man incapable of horrors that became far too commonplace. And so, a dead man walks, still tending to his flock, his trials mounting by the day. It's a classic American Western scenario, with the massive rocky outgrowths and damp green fields of Easkey, Ireland, standing in for the dust of Monument Valley. One might willfully misread the movie's title, but alas, there's no cavalry on the way; Lavelle stands alone. Like Gary Cooper's Marshal Kane in High Noon, he marches stoically toward his would-be killer, armed with nothing but his faith. (At West Newton.)

Chef ★★★ This isn't a movie about Jon Favreau. Sure, he wrote, directed and starred in this comedy about a once-hot gourmet chef, Carl Casper, who's in a creative rut. After being called out by his critics, Casper begins serving up delectable Cuban sandwiches from a food truck, winning back favor from customers and critics alike by returning to his roots. Favreau's a filmmaker who impressed with the hit indies Swingers and Made, and then a couple of massive Iron Man movies, before making the joyless critical and commercial failure Cowboys & Aliens. But Chef is a small picture, a tasty concoction in which his simmering acting chops are brought to a boil by 10-year-old Emjay Anthony, who delightfully underplays Casper's son, Percy, as the two bond over the heat of the truck's grill on a cross-country trip. Is Favreau as thin-skinned as Casper, who gets into a very public social media spat with one of his earliest supporters? Who cares, when such big talents as Dustin Hoffman, John Leguizamo, Sofia Vergara, Oliver Platt, Scarlett Johansson and Robert Downey Jr. are along for the ride? (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Disappearance of Eleanor Rigby: Them ★★1/2 There's a lot to like in this film from newcomer Ned Benson, a portrait of a marriage fractured by a tragedy that's only gradually revealed, never wholly coming into focus. Jessica Chastain is Eleanor Rigby, and when first we see her and her husband, Conor Ludlow (James McAvoy), they're skipping out on a dinner bill, fleeing into the streets of Manhattan—rather unforgivable, once we find out that Conor owns his own restaurant. Still, this doesn't explain why Eleanor attempts to take her own life in the next scene. But then, there are many questions about this pair that remain unanswered, which can probably be explained by the fact that Benson's movie used to live as two separate pictures, subtitled Him and Her. The reconfigured Them is a paired-down compromise that frustrates; the companion films premiered in Toronto a year ago to much acclaim, but this edit gives the impression that too much was left on the cutting room floor. And yet, a handful of scenes etch in the memory, like a tender monologue delivered by Eleanor's father (William Hurt). Alas, more attention should have been focused on us. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

a 2012 Best Foreign Language Film nominee, opens with an image of the underside of the Brooklyn Bridge reflected in a dirty puddle. This shot encapsulates a lot of the messy goings-on in the screenplay from local author Dennis Lehane, based on his short story "Animal Rescue." The small world of quiet bartender Bob Saginowski (Tom Hardy), who works for his cousin Marv (James Gandolfini), is about to be turned upside-down. Their small pub, a front for a scheme of money drops that funnel cash to the Chechen mobsters who control the bar, is robbed by a couple of clueless thugs, setting in motion events that will expose neighborhood secrets going back a decade. Lehane's plot is secondary, but this is a terrific character study featuring fine work from Swedish actress Noomi Rapace, imposing Belgian Matthias Schoenaerts (star of Bullhead), the late Gandolfini and especially Hardy, a Brit who brings a touch of Terry Malloy and Marty Piletti to his lovesick loner, a man who shares many traits with his pit bull, a scruffy pup he's pulled from the garbage. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

THE EQUALIZER ★★★ Your parents may have been fans of The Equalizer, the 1985-89 CBS series starring British actor Edward Woodward as a 60-something retired agent-turned-private detective, an avenging angel helping to equalize the odds against the downtrodden. But you might think twice about taking them to this excessively violent film that serves as the TV show's prequel, transplanting the action from the mean streets of New York to the meaner streets of Boston. Robert McCall, the stuffy suit- and overcoat-wearing Brit, has been reimagined as, well, Denzel Washington, an everyman-with-a-past who manages a Home Depot-like warehouse store that you just know will serve as the perfect location for an extended, bloody shootout. When McCall meets Teri (Chloë Grace Moretz), an underage prostitute controlled by Russian gangsters (led by Marton Csokas in a terrifically scene-chewing turn), he can idle no longer. Slickly helmed by Antoine Fuqua (who directed Washington in his Oscar-winning role in 2001's Training Day), this completely ridiculous entertainment even grants its star with Terminator-like eagle vision. Your folks can keep their small-screen Equalizer; this big-screen update is a brutal blast. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

THE HUNDRED-FOOT JOURNEY ★★1/2 Bringing novelist Richard C. Morais' best-seller to the big screen, director Lasse Hallström employs the same unsubtle touch that made 2000's Chocolat, his sultry romantic drama set in a small French village, such a hit. No doubt, that's exactly what producers Steven Spielberg and Oprah Winfrey wanted for the tale of Hassan Kadam (Manish Dayal), a handsome culinary magician who flees London ("British vegetables have no soul," you see) with his siblings and their Papa (Om Puri) after they've already been displaced from their native India. The family settles in—yes—a small French village after a vehicular mishap nearly kills them. "Maybe brakes break for a reason," announces the elder Kadam, rationalizing his intention to open an Indian restaurant 100 feet from the elegant Michelin-starred restaurant lorded over by Madame Mallory (Helen Mirren, who won't win another Oscar for her French accent). Hassan's talents eventually broker a truce to the war between the eateries, but a third-act detour to Paris nearly kills the film—until Dayal's star turn charms the picture back to life during the conclusion's return to the south of France. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

LAND HO! ★★★1/2 Martha Stephens wrote and directed the features Passenger Pigeons and Pilgrim Song, which you likely haven't heard of. Nevertheless, without those films under her belt, she wouldn't have discovered Southern spitfire Earl Lynn Nelson, a newcomer to the acting game who starred in both. Through some miracle (likely the hand of executive producer David Gordon Green), Stephens has been partnered with Aaron Katz, the talented writer/director behind little-seen indies Quiet City, Cold Weather and Dance Party, USA. It's a great mix. The two share writing and directing credits on this crowd-pleaser about a pair of 60-something brother-in-laws—one widowed, one divorced—who rekindle their bond during a picturesque trip to Iceland. "Ex-brother-in-laws," corrects Colin (Australian Paul Eenhoorn, star of This Is Martin Bonner), after Mitch (Nelson) apologizes for "tricking" him into the trip. "That's a pretty lousy thing to do," Colin deadpans. "Driving through the country, staying at nice hotels, eating good food." Our odd couple also spend an evening clubbing with two young "tight-assed women," which is a compliment coming from Mitch, who's fond of calling people "turd." Delightful. (At West Newton.)

LOVE IS STRANGE ★★★1/2 In this compassionate portrait of the hardships faced by a couple finally married after nearly four decades together, John Lithgow and Alfred Molina bring real tenderness to their roles as Ben and George, a septuagenarian painter and a slightly younger music teacher at a Manhattan Catholic school. Rapidly, the two discover the meaning of "for better or worse." George is fired as a result of their union, forcing the two to sell the apartment they've shared for almost 20 years. Worse, they must live apart until they can find an affordable home. George moves in with a couple of NYPD officers (Manny Perez and Cheyenne Jackson) who live in their tenement, while Ben is taken in by his nephew (Darren Burrows) and his wife (Marisa Tomei), sharing a bunk bed with their territorial teenage son (Charlie Tahan). Separation takes its toll on the couple, and Lithgow is particularly fine as he quietly communicates his creeping realization that he's become a burden. Never dipping wholly into melodrama, this heartbreaker from director Ira Sachs casts its spell gradually, like the delicate Chopin that serves as the soundtrack. Lovely. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

THE NOVEMBER MAN ★1/2 "You feel the need for a relationship?" ex-CIA agent Peter Devereaux (Pierce Brosnan) asks his former protege, David Mason (Luke Bracey), before telling him to "get a dog" in this international espionage picture from Roger Donaldson (Brosnan's Dante's Peak director). Likewise, if you feel the need to see Brosnan go through the run-and-gun motions of the spy game, watch him in one of his James Bond films. Apparently, Brosnan misses his iconic role enough to have executive produced this cut-rate thriller that casts former Bond girl Olga Kurylenko (Quantum of Solace) as Alice Fournier, the woman the licensed killer has made it his mission to save. He protects her from the trigger-happy patriot Mason, who's unknowingly taking orders from a corrupt senior official within the agency who's protecting Arkady Federov (Lazar Ristovski), Russia's president-elect. This second-rate spook is a long way from an Ian Fleming character. And this picture, based on Bill Granger's novel There Are No Spies from the "November Man" series, leaves you neither shaken nor stirred. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

THE SKELETON TWINS ★★★ Recognizing that there's often an air of sadness to former Saturday Night Live player Kristen Wiig's performances, director Craig Johnson and his co-writer, Mark Heyman, fashioned this comic drama involving chronic depression

around the actress's hilariously melancholy talents. When we first see Wiig's Maggie, she's about to swallow a fistful of pills, but she's stopped by a phone call informing her that her fraternal twin, Milo (Wiig's longtime SNL cast mate Bill Hader)—a self-described "tragic gay cliche"—has just attempted to end his life. It would be easy to dismiss Hader's performance as a feature-length version of his "Stefon" character, but there's a depth to Milo that cuts deeper than the slits he's carved into his wrists. Nevertheless, some of Stefon's gleefully warped sensibility surfaces in Milo's suicide note, which reads, "To whom it may concern: see ya later," punctuated with a smiley face. And really, that about sums up the film's formula; it goes into some dark corners, but it always emerges in a happier place. As much as Milo and Maggie try to sabotage everything good and stable, it's their laughter that guides them—and us—through. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

This Is Where I Leave You ★★ Wasting nearly everyone involved, Shawn Levy brings his middle-of-the-road style to a movie that demanded so much more. Jonathan Tropper adapted the screenplay from his well-regarded novel, and the ensemble cast is certainly an asset (Jason Bateman, Tina Fey, Adam Driver and Corey Stoll play the children of Jane Fonda's matriarch). But Levy plays everything too broad, never finding a dramatic tone to ground all the comic beats; that's not terribly surprising, as he's best known for the Night at the Museum movies. Bateman is terrific as protagonist Judd Altman—as is Driver as family antagonist Phillip—but Fey's dramatic chops still have a way to go. Sure, she sheds quite a few tears, but her anguish wouldn't be any more believable if she were playing a crocodile. The siblings have gathered to fulfill their father's dying wish and sit shiva. He was an atheist, mind you. OK, so the plot exists simply to get these disparate people together. The one thing they share? Their distaste for their mother's new boobs. And for this alone, Fonda deserves to win a good sport award. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Trip to Italy ★★★ A few years back, prolific filmmaker Michael Winterbottom unleashed a culinary, comic treat with The Trip, a largely improvised travelogue featuring comedians Steve Coogan and Rob Brydon (as a pair of friends named, conveniently, Steve Coogan and Rob Brydon) touring around northern England, sampling the region's restaurants on a magazine assignment. It wasn't really about much more than that, but listening to this duo riff off each other as semi-fictionalized versions of themselves sure was funny. They haven't lost any of their comic edge as they return for seconds, traveling from Piedmont to the Amalfi Coast to Capri in a convertible Mini Cooper, retracing the steps of the Romantic poets. It's doubtful that Byron and Shelley engaged in dueling impersonations of 19th-century actors, but hearing the Alan Partridge star (Coogan) and the talented Welsh mimic (Brydon) return to the vocal stylings of Michael Caine, as well as volley back-and-forth with the voices of various James Bonds, Batman, his nemesis Bane and the different decibels of Al Pacino is side-splitting. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

A Walk Among the Tombstones ★★★ Although capable, former NYPD cop turned unlicensed investigator Matt Scudder (Liam Neeson) would rather defuse a situation than dish out the hurt. Hell, sometimes he'll even take a good beating himself—but with that nose, who'd notice? This isn't the first time the recovering alcoholic has gone from the pages of Lawrence Block's best-selling mystery novels to the big screen (Jeff Bridges played him in 1986's poorly received 8 Million Ways to Die). But here writer/director Scott Frank is a pro who knows how to use his star—Neeson makes for quite the drunken Dirty Harry—and block his action, a forgotten art in our quick cut/shaky camera era. Scudder doesn't have a particular problem with corruption ("I couldn't have fed my family without it"), and he's a bit of a Luddite; setting this film in the halcyon days of 1999 allows him to both look up newspaper articles on microfiche while still fretting about Y2K—with the specter of 9/11 looming on the horizon. When a drug trafficker hires Scudder to find out who kidnapped and murdered his wife, one of the film's uglier characters observes, "People are afraid of all the wrong things." Some things never change. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

BEACH BOYS

Surfer Blood has been riding a steady wave of quiet success after breaking out in 2009 with the single "Swim." In the five years since, the West Palm Beach quartet has put out a steady succession of excellent albums, most recently a split 7-inch vinyl co-created with touring mates We Are Scientists. The Florida outfit's beachy name reflects their sound, marked by laid-back rhythms, unobtrusive guitar riffs and buzzy hooks, complemented by simple but reflective lyrics. Their latest full-length effort, Pythons, finds Surfer Blood wading in slightly darker waters, focusing on frontman John Paul Pitts' relationship troubles. Catch these dudes when they coast into town on Oct. 1 with We Are Scientists at the Sinclair. / Katie Smith

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

ORB BITS Since the late 19th century, legend has it that a mysterious orb, known as the "spook light," has appeared in the area where Missouri, Oklahoma and Kansas meet, dubbed the "Devil's Promenade." That's also the title of an exhibit from Antone Dolezal and Lara Shipley, who bring the paranormal activity to light through photographs recreating locals' observations. Accounts vary in detail—some say it's bright white, while others insist it's blue or red—and so do the stories behind them: Folklore includes ghosts of Native American lovers looking to reunite, a miner carrying his lantern and a wandering Confederate soldier. Decide for yourself as you visit the Ozark Mountains Oct. 10 through Nov. 8 at 555 Gallery. / Sarah Hagman PHOTO: ANTONE DOLEZAL

COOKING THE BOOKS

Boston knows its way around an authentic lobster roll, but when it comes to, say, enchiladas, cities like San Antonio have us beat. That's the home turf of chef Adán Medrano, author of Truly Texas Mexican, a cookbook tracing the evolution of Tex-Mex cuisine. Drawing on indigenous traditions and Medrano's own family's cooking, the 100 recipes span everything from tamales to turcos, serving up time-tested tips on technique and plenty of cultural history along the way. Bring your appetite when Medrano hits the Harvard Coop on Oct. 14. / Elizabeth Isenberg

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of t he three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

PICK YOUR POISON

A hidden gem tucked away in the twee Cape Cod hamlet of Sandwich, Heritage Museums and Gardens hosted The Connoisseur's Dinner, a fundraiser for major donors featuring special guests Keith and Emiley Lockhart.

On a flawless evening, guests gathered for cocktails and listened to the maestro and his missus talk about American culture and the arts, he from his perspective as conductor of "America's orchestra" (the Boston Pops), she as VP and general counsel of Boston 2024, which is vying to bring the Olympics to Boston.

In addition to some super-rich and highly press-averse types, the crowd included state Senate President Therese Murray (whose daughter was married there two weeks earlier), Our Lady of Louisburg Square, Hope Baker, the dapper and distinguished John Funkhouser, arts patron Sue Hamilton and so on and so forth, all of whom sipped and nibbled amiably and remarked upon how great the place looked.

The evening's Lucrezia Borgia moment belonged to Murray: During a conversation about Wicked Plants, the exhibit of poisonous and dangerous flora then on view, she said, "I need to take notes. I'm sure I still have a few enemies."

WE'LL SETTLE FOR A HANDSHAKE

Forget raindrops on roses and whiskers on kittens; dogs and drinking are two of our favorite things, and they came together at Canines and Cocktails, a cross between a day in the dog park and a night at the club.

Held on the terrace of the Seaport Hotel, the season finale of the weekly pooch-friendly party was a fundraiser for the Animal Rescue League of Boston, hosted by anchorman extraordinaire Randy Price and his stunning spaniel, Bruin. The evening attracted the likes of WBUR babe Clint Cavanaugh, handsome Harvard grad student Hector Medina, Fort Hillions Jennifer Piemme and Ellen Wells with Osa (the pup they rescued from Costa Rica), horse farmers Alexandra Arthurs and Tom Trumbull with Bucca (a perfectly behaved German shepherd on his first outing to the big city), hospitality hotshots Joe Fallon and Vincent Lago with their hotel's beloved mascot, Catie Copley, A.R.L. volunteer Christopher Tom with an adorable dachshund named Ringo, an oversized pug named Chloe whose owner, Andy Lopez, wore her over his shoulder, and charming veterinarian Martha Smith-Blackmore with the Divine Miss M, a French bulldog decked out in pink frills, who was easily the best-dressed bitch in the place.

The evening's highlight undoubtedly came when Price rallied everyone around to tape the Channel 5 EyeOpener for the next morning, prompting one guest to mutter, "Nothing says 'Rise and shine!' quite like a bunch of buzzed people hoisting martini glasses."

However, the evening's funniest comment came from the person who said, "You've gotta love a party where sniffing another guest's butt is an acceptable way of saying hello."

WHAT HAPPENS IN BURMA

As Julie Andrews might have put it, the halls were alive with the sound of music when The Boston Conservatory unveiled its new Ipswich building at an Appreciation Dinner for major donors.

The evening began with cocktails and yummy little nibbles accompanied by conservatory student Anna Ellsworth on the harp, followed by performances by the music, dance and theater divisions in the beautiful new orchestra rehearsal hall. Dinner was then served in the third-floor dance studio.

Among the backers and benefactors on hand: conservatory president Richard Ortner, redheaded fashionista Liz Krupp and her handsome other half, George, BSO donors Richard Dix and Greg Bulger of Dover, musical theater honcho Neil Donohoe, Beacon Hillion Kitty Flather, board member Kelly McKernan, the delightful David and Katherine Sloan, real estate panjandrum Tony Pangaro and his comme il faut wife, Creelea Henderson, blond beauty Kim Haack, the incorrigible Peter Wender, and one man who said, "Are you checking out that woman's ass?" to which his friend replied, "I'm gay. I'm checking out her shoes."

However, the evening's funniest remark came from the woman describing a massage she received in Myanmar: "They touched me in places I didn't even know I had." ◆

NICE ICE, BABY

A CONFESSION: I WENT TO MY FIRST professional hockey game in Florida, of all places. The rink was randomly situated off a highway, and there was something surreal about stepping into the chill from 86-degree heat. Even the team's punny name—the Florida Everblades—seemed rather suspect. Shouldn't teams be named after intimidating fauna and potentially disastrous weather patterns?

It's a lot easier to be a hockey fan in Boston, especially right now. Big things are in the works for the Big Bad Bruins. In the spring, they'll break ground in Brighton on a new hockey rink that will allow the team to practice in Boston proper rather than way out in Wilmington. And as I type this, TD Garden is unveiling phase one of a $70 million renovation (complete with lots of new noshing options). The real action, of course, is on the ice, and there are plenty of reasons to believe another trip to the playoffs is in the cards. In this issue, Steve Conroy profiles one of them, our cover subject, Tuukka Rask, finding out what drives the goaltender who's been dubbed the best in the league. And in a second feature, two of our resident hockey fans, Sarah Hagman and Matt Martinelli, stage a faceoff of their own, tackling six key questions for the upcoming season. Turning from the ice sheet to the dance floor, Jonathan Soroff interviews Bay State native Tom Bergeron, host with the most of Dancing with the Stars. Lacking both telegenic composure and the ability to remain upright on ice for more than five seconds at a stretch, I'm mighty impressed by the talents featured in this issue. Hope they make fans of you too.

THREE'S COMPANY

A TRIO TAKES ON THE FURNITURE BIZ WITH A BLEND OF OLD AND NEW. »

KNOCKING ON WOOD: The Greycork team hopes to win fans with furniture made in Massachusetts from solid wood rather than cheaper composite; check out the goods at greycork.com, and stay tuned for a sofa and bed frame early next year.

Turning the Tables

A year ago, John Humphrey was an analyst at a venture capital firm. Now he's founded a venture of his own. "I didn't want to be in investing anymore. I wanted to build a team that would have an opportunity to do something impactful," says the CEO of Greycork, a Boston-based startup launching on Oct. 13 with a tech-forward business plan, but a very tangible product: solid wood furniture crafted in Somerset, an hour south of the city.

After quitting his job in finance, Humphrey began searching for partners. He found them in two Rhode Island School of Design grads, furniture designer Bruce Kim and digital designer Alec Babala. At their first meeting—held via Google Hangout, naturally—the trio of 20-somethings started to conceptualize a brand for Ikea graduates, with high-quality furniture that wouldn't require an engineering degree to assemble or a small country's GDP to afford.

With Humphrey's experience in VC funding, Greycork raised just shy of $300,000 from angel investors to get sourcing and manufacturing underway. The result: "Brooks," a debut collection with a bench, a coffee table and a dining table, priced from $500 to $950 and available in solid walnut, ash or white oak, with steel legs in three different finishes. The trio hopes to open a Boston showroom by early 2015, but with designs that ship flat and snap together easily, the focus will always be on e-commerce, which Humphrey sees as an untapped market. "Under 4 percent of furniture sales—a $100 billion industry—are online, compared to apparel and footwear at 15 percent," he explains. "We built our business so you can buy solid wood furniture online that is inexpensive to ship, sets up in seconds and has a flexible return policy."

The plan is to release new collections three times a year, a pace made possible by close ties with their local manufacturer. "A lot of what we are able to do as a brand we do because we have these relationships," Humphrey says. "We're interacting with this rich heritage of woodworkers, and that emphasis on craftsmanship gets communicated through our digital presence." Cue the teaser photos Greycork posted on social media in the weeks leading up to the launch, where the designs "show some leg," peeking out from beneath the American flag in a nod to their made-in-the-USA pedigree. "People who crave knowledge will be more engaged," says Humphrey, who hopes the teasers have left some potential customers on the edge of their seats. / Renata Certo-Ware

THE PRINCE

Cary Elwes has appeared in dozens of films, from the Academy Award-winning Glory to the gruesome thriller Saw, but to legions of fangirls (and boys) he'll always be flaxen-haired farm boy Westley from 1987's The Princess Bride. His new tell-all As You Wish chronicles his favorite role to date. He gave us the scoop before his Oct. 17 appearance at the Brattle Theatre. / Meghan Kavanaugh

YOU WERE IN TOWN THIS SUMMER WORKING ON THE GREENS ARE GONE, DUE OUT NEXT YEAR. ARE YOU EXCITED TO BE BACK AGAIN? I love your city. Oh my God, I had forgotten how beautiful it was and how incredible it is to have the water right there....I love the energy, I love the beauty of it, I love the culture, I love the history—the history just gets me always.

YOU'RE MAKING US BLUSH! ON TO THE BOOK: WHAT MADE YOU WANT TO WRITE IT? Myself and the cast often get asked by fans what it was like to make the film—was it really as much fun as it looked? And I always say to them, it was more fun than you think. It was an incredible experience, and it's very hard to try to explain that in person. I thought, why not put it all in a book and share it all with the fans?

WHAT'S SOMETHING NEW THAT FANS WILL LEARN? I broke my toe early on in the shoot. Oh yeah, riding around on Andre [the Giant]'s ATV. He kept teasing me—"You want to try my toy, boss?" ... He kept trying to goad me to have a go on his all-terrain vehicle, and eventually I caved and went, "OK, fine." I had no business getting on it at all. I didn't go more than 2 feet, and I broke my toe riding over a rock.

AFTER NEARLY 30 YEARS, WHAT'S YOUR MOST MEMORABLE FAN ENCOUNTER? Somewhere, there's a young lady with my name tattooed on her neck. I find it inconceivable.

ROYAL READ: Cary Elwes' new memoir serves up some Princess Bride dish.

BEAN THERE, HAVEN'T DONE THAT: Chef John Delpha's spicy take on green beans is all new.

Good Eats: Green Beantown

A year ago, dry-fried green beans would have been the most unlikely appetizer on Rosebud's menu. But when the dining car's neighbors from Painted Burro and Posto purchased and revamped the restaurant as Rosebud American Kitchen & Bar, they brought in chef John Delpha to reimagine the menu, and the Sichuan-meets-smokehouse starter was born. As a tribute to his love for both Chinese food and American barbecue, Delpha fries the beans until they're appropriately wrinkly, punches them up with pickled mustard greens and sesame seeds, and swaps out the traditional bits of ground pork for hunks of house-smoked pork shoulder. / Elizabeth Bomze

Purveyors: Drizzled Delights

With two dozen extra-virgin olive oils on tap at her store and certifications from some of the most prestigious tasting institutes in the world, Mary Taylor sounds like a sommelier who has been living and breathing high-octane oil for years. But the owner of Harvard Square's recently launched Salt & Olive is relatively new to the biz, a quick study who gave up her longtime job at Puma to pursue the best olive oils, aged balsamic vinegars, spices and teas she can find. Stop in to taste her latest crushes from around the globe—particularly the spicy Spanish Picual, the fennel-sweet Tunisian Chemlali and the Australian Coratina that starts smooth and finishes with a grassy punch. / Elizabeth Bomze

Drink of the Moment
KILLER B'S

INVENTOR: Operations manager Sal Gesamondo

INGREDIENTS: Bulleit bourbon, ginger beer, honey simple syrup, jalapeno and lemon juice

FLAVOR: With a name that nods to the Bruins across the street, this one's not too spicy, not too sweet. You get "the sweet bourbon mixed in with the sting of the jalapeno," Gesamondo says. As for the heat, he adds, "The ginger beer and the honey really cut it down."

PAIR IT WITH: Beer can chicken, Gesamondo's personal favorite, which chef Paul Booras roasts with Blue Moon and tops with a jalapeno and smoked bacon glaze. In case of overtime, the kitchen stays open until midnight Thursday through Saturday.

AHEAD OF THE GAME: Like the other Tavern in the Squares, this eighth location has 50 draft beers, plenty to sample before heading to the neighboring TD Garden. Or, hunker down for three periods at the 36-seat bar: There are 10 televisions and a video wall.

MIDDLE GROUND: Looking to branch out from your usual order? The menu's Tapped Off section features beer cocktails.

IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD: Opened last month, the restaurant wants to cater to the Garden crowd, but also hopes to be a neighborhood hangout. Gesamondo, who has been with the franchise since he was a bar back and there was only one location, says: "Not to sound cheesy, but that's always been our focus, the neighborhood feel." / Sarah Hagman

QUICK STUDY: Creative sandwiches and elegant prix fixe plates will emerge from the same kitche

DOUBLE TAKE

A NEW SIBLING DUO COVERS MANY BASES IN KENDALL SQUARE.

Ames Street Deli and Study
73 Ames St., Cambridge
(617-374-0701) amesstreetdeli.com
(617-374-0700) studyrestaurant.com

FORTHCOMING SIBLING RESTAURANTS Ames Street Deli and Study aim to offer a little something for everyone. There'll be sit-down breakfast, lunch and dinner at Study, with a la carte, prix fixe and tasting options in the evening. And in the adjoining Ames Street Deli, you can get pastries, coffee and sandwiches by day and cocktails by night. Yes, there's a lot going on at the Kendall Square spots from Sam Treadway, Diana Kudajarova and her husband, Tse Wei Lim, the team behind Journeyman and backbar in Somerville. But when they first began to conceive of a restaurant for the ground floor of the Broad Institute, they had only one mission in mind: sandwiches.

"We're hoping to make the best sandwiches ever," Kudajarova says. "We love sandwiches, but a lot of sandwich shops suffer from a lack of kitchen space. They're crammed in tight quarters." That won't be an issue at Ames Street, which will share a spacious kitchen with Study—similar to how Journeyman and backbar operate out of the same space. When it opens this month, expect a menu of seven to eight creative seasonal sandwiches, like a fried broccoli offering or the Tripe on Rye, made with crispy tripe, pastrami-style beef heart and gruyere on Baltic rye bread.

But two slabs of bread can't contain all their ambitions for Ames Street. The 40-seat space, which features a clean, modern design with Corian countertops, will undergo a dramatic transformation at about 4 pm for the after-work crowd, turning into a cocktail bar helmed by Joe Cammarata (backbar). "There's not really a great cocktail spot in Kendall, so we thought we could make a great contribution to the neighborhood," Kudajarova says.

The bar will also serve Study, which will offer a more refined dining experience with sit-down service for 40 and a private dining room that accommodates 35. Kudajarova promises to bring some "adventure and flair" to breakfast and lunch (hello, dessert trolley!), while dinner will showcase dishes like dry-aged duck breast with sunchokes, meyer lemon puree, meyer lemon-ginger fondant, and sunflower sprouts and seeds. With a la carte offerings and a four-course prix fixe that will likely be priced around $50, Study is positioned to be more of a spot for regulars than the tasting-focused Journeyman, which will transition to a $65-$95 ticketing system in November. But the price point isn't the only difference between the Journeyman/backbar and Ames Street/Study duos.

"There's a huge, bright storefront for Ames Street, so it's very hard for us to be hidden," Kudajarova says. "For Journeyman and backbar, part of the charm is they're tucked away, but we really wanted Ames Street Deli and Study to be part of the neighborhood."

TAPPING INTO HISTORY

NOW THAT THE TAP TRAILHOUSE has opened, its very existence seems inevitable in retrospect. A "Colonial-inspired gastropub" located near Faneuil Hall? If Boston Nightlife Ventures hadn't come up with the concept, somebody else certainly would have—only they might have created a theme-park eatery rife with cheesy decor and even cheesier food. (Puritan poutine, anyone?)

But BNV, which already owned the Tap, put those fears at ease with a tavern-style redesign featuring exposed brick, dark leather seating and plenty of reclaimed wood. Then the team brought in estimable chef Bill Brodsky (chef/owner of City Landing, formerly of the Wequassett Inn in Chatham) to consult on the fare. Brodsky worked with executive chef Matthew Barre (Sonsie, Post 390, Top of the Hub) to devise a menu that incorporates traditional New England flavors while staying on-trend. What's the most popular dish so far? "Our burger [with Vermont cheddar, house-cured bacon and housemade onion marmalade] has really taken off," Barre says. "But the fried oyster tacos are what I'm most proud of. Everybody fell in love with them right away." Available at lunch and dinner, the Dock Square mini oyster tacos are reminiscent of oysters Rockefeller, with spinach, bacon, mustard aioli and pickled onions.

The "supper" menu ranges from lobster pie to maple-glazed short-smoked duck with pease porridge, and the dessert list is a playful take on tradition. There's Boston Cream Pie "But in a Jar" (it's "like a trifle," Barre says), Indian pudding ("a cross between a steamed cake and a souffle") topped with blueberry gelato, and a signature pumpkin whoopie pie with Moxie-ginger syrup. And with the rotating selection of 24 New England craft beers and cocktails featuring housemade cordials (such as apple pie and cranberry), the Tap Trailhouse could actually turn out to be a destination for locals and tourists.

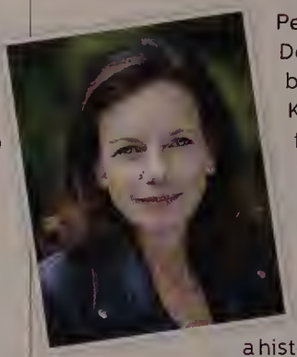
We learned a lot in college, but even those who attended the most elite institutions may have a gap or two in their educations. Namely, how to navigate all those pesky real-world issues, from starting a 401(k) to cooking dinner without the help of a microwave. Enter Society of Grownups, a new learning initiative from MassMutual and IDEO, launched Oct. 8, that aims to serve as a "masters program for adulthood."

The target demo, according to "professional grownup" and director Nondini Naqui, might be "a 42-year-old who's buying their first home, or a 27-year-old deciding if now is the time to expand their family, or a 32-year-old who's moving in with their significant other and wondering how they should split the bills." Basically, it's all of us. Moreover, Naqui says, it's about making growing up fun, rather than a chore. "When I was a kid, all I wanted to be was a grownup. Somewhere along the way, it lost that luster and that fascination, and I thought, 'Oh, being a grownup has all these responsibilities.' I just want to get back to that, to it being exciting. It's not about sacrificing everything; it's about living the life that you want to live."



From their Brookline headquarters, the Society offers one-on-one financial advisement, cheekily named classes and supper clubs where fledgling grownups can mix and mingle. We rounded up just a few of the classes that caught our eye. / Alexandra Cavallo

HOW TO BE A REAL-LIFE ADULT

THE CLASS	TAKE IT IF
NO CEREAL FOR DINNER (Learning to Cook Like a Grownup)	You've subsisted on a diet of ramen, beer and pizza for the better part of the past five years. Cereal? Please, that would require having milk in the fridge, and last time you checked, the only stuff in there was half a case of Miller, a bottle of ketchup and something furry that might have once been a vegetable.
BEYOND THE HOSTEL (Planning Grownup Trips)	The highlights of your last big vacation included all-inclusive booze, a wet T-shirt contest and a questionable dalliance with a stranger.
LOANS & GROANS (A Student Debt Workshop)	You hear from the good folks at Sallie Mae more often than your parents. Payback's a bitch, but you can do it!
HOME IS WHERE... (The [Apartment, House, Loft, Studio, Bungalow] Is)	You could have bought a small country (OK, a small country house) with the cash you've paid landlords—but aren't sure whether you're ready to be king or queen of your own castle.
IN CASE OF A ZOMBIE APOCALYPSE (Why You Should Think About a Will)	You find legalese scarier than death itself. In case of an actual zombiepocalypse, it'll be good to have your affairs in order. Actually, it'll be good to have them in order either way.

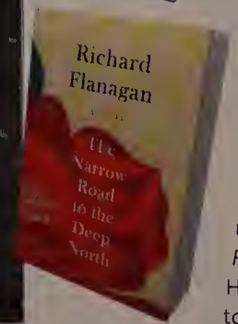
BOOKING IT



Persistence paid off for Deborah Porter. "We've been trying to get Doris Kearns Goodwin to the festival for years," says the founder of the Boston Book Festival, whose sixth annual installment brings more than 50 free events—including a history keynote from the Pulitzer-winning Goodwin—to Copley Square Oct. 23-25. The author of The Bully Pulpit is one of five keynote speakers, along with Thirty Girls novelist Susan Minot, 14-time Grammy winner and first-time memoirist Herbie Hancock, Pritzker-winning architect Norman Foster and kids' keynote Rick Riordan, author of the Percy Jackson & the Olympians series ("Someone called the office yesterday to say they're driving here from Ohio to see him," Porter confides). And there's a host of intriguing happenings beyond the headliners, from Writer Idol, where literary agents will pick apart the first page of hopefuls' manuscripts, to a literary jam session with authors of musically themed novels and the indie-rockers of the Michael J. Epstein Memorial Library. To tide us over till the fest, we asked Porter about her reading list of late. / Jacqueline Houton

What's on her bedside table right now: "I am reading Euphoria by Lily King, who is presenting this year. It's based on the life of Margaret Mead—really enjoying it. I've also been reading Scott Anderson's Lawrence in Arabia. He too will be appearing at the BBF. And I've been dipping into The Sixth Extinction by Elizabeth Kolbert. It is fascinating, but oh so depressing."

The last book that kept her awake: "Hmm. Ari Shavit's My Promised Land. It had a great deal of meaning to me, and it was at times very difficult to read."

What she'll read next: "Jennifer Haigh, author of our One City One Story pick, 'Sublimation,' has recommended Richard Flanagan's The Narrow Road to the Deep North as well as Fourth of July Creek by Smith Henderson. Looking forward to those. After the BBF."

THIS CRIME PAYS

LEHANE'S LATEST NOVEL DROPS IN ON A GRITTY UNDERWORLD.

The Drop* by Dennis Lehane
Published by William Morrow, 224 pages, $15

BLOODY BUCKS THAT ARE LITERALLY laundered, a severed arm that gets tossed into the harbor—just another day in Lehane land. The Dorchester-bred scribe's latest crime novel was adapted from his screenplay for the film of the same name (itself based on one of Lehane's short stories), and its title alludes to a bar that siphons money to thugs. The joint in question had belonged to Marv until Chechen gangsters took it over, leaving him a brooding employee. The F-word seems to pepper his every sentence, including the insults tossed to his cousin and fellow bartender, Bob, a shy, sad churchgoer who curiously avoids taking Communion.

On his way home from work one night, the lonely Bob finds both a canine companion and a new love interest, rescuing an abused dog from a trash can and meeting the nervous and mysterious Nadia in the process. But these are hardly the only complications about to enter Bob's life. A robbery at the bar leads to a beating, followed by a complex pursuit of the money, not to mention encounters with a frighteningly sangfroid killer. Lehane brings the grim underworld to life with brilliantly tough dialogue, but also captures Bob's tenderness and Marv's surly despair. And he hides a twist deep in the plot's pocket.

FROM PAGE 29: "No worries," Marv said to the shaking gun. "No worries." And he put the rest of the money in the bag.

The thin guy clutched the bag to him and stepped back and now it was the two of them on one side of the bar with their guns and Bob and Marv on the other side, Bob's heart beating in his chest like a sack of ferrets tossed off a boat. ◆

Traveler's Checks

If you're in Charleston on a Saturday, head to the farmers market in Marion Square, where you can fill up on spicy Latin egg dishes, roti and sweet crepes from the food stalls and ogle produce, jewelry and crafts such as hand-stitched dog collars.

Fuel up with your brew of choice at Kudu Coffee & Craft Beer before exploring the boutiques and antique shops lining nearby King Street.

CHARLESTON'S CHARMS: Husk, the Wentworth Mansion and Robert Lange Studios are all worth a visit.

The Escape Artist / Victoria Abbott Riccardi

SOUTHERN DRAW

CHARLESTON'S TRAVEL REP IS WELL-EARNED.

CHARLESTON HAS LONG BEEN A DRAW for Bostonians—and vice versa—beginning in colonial times, when one port's well-heeled headed south to escape their frigid winters and the other's traveled north to flee their humid summers. Today, the two cities are only a two-hour flight apart, and they still share much in common, including a seaside location, manageable size, a bounty of students and young professionals and an appealing mix of historic and modern neighborhoods. Add in nearby beaches, stellar locavore restaurants, vibrant art and bar scenes and stunning antebellum mansions, and you've got a terrific place to visit for a weekend or longer, one deemed the top destination in the U.S. in Travel & Leisure's World's Best Awards for the past two years.

Kick off your stay with a carriage ride to learn the landmarks and get a quick overview of Charleston's history, including how eight former English generals founded it in 1670, thanks to King Charles II, who gave the title of Carolina to the men as a gift for their military service. In honor of the king, the men named the settlement Charles Towne, which rapidly became a wealthy city through the deerskin trade and cultivation of cotton, indigo and rice. You can hear all about it from the drivers of the family-run Palmetto Carriage Works, located near eastern Market Street in a bright red barn.

For lunch, consider nearby Hyman's Seafood, which Southern Living magazine dubbed the best seafood restaurant in South Carolina (thus explaining the dozens of celebrity-signed plates and photos covering the walls). Order some local shrimp or oysters, the creamy she-crab soup and whatever local fish catches your eye from the dozen or so listed on the chalkboard. A fancier option is Husk, whose chef/owner, Sean Brock, has won national accolades for his upscale southern dishes—glazed pig ear lettuce wraps with marinated vegetables, tomato-smothered shrimp with grits—made with heirloom ingredients and a steadfast commitment to Lowcountry authenticity (you won't find a drop of olive oil in the kitchen). Then there's Xiao Bao Biscuit, a cult favorite among locals for its creative Asian soul food. In a casual room with dozens of red chopsticks set in glasses on bare wood tables, you can tuck into dishes like braised lamb over Chinese grits with a poached egg and mustard greens.

Although the beloved Gibbes Museum of Art is currently closed for renovations, the city has dozens of intriguing galleries, including Robert Lange Studios, featuring eclectic works by young artists in a beautiful brick building complete with a piano, a working wooden swing suspended from the ceiling and a residence for visiting artists. Check out more galleries around Church and Meeting Streets, as well as along Broad Street near the Battery and White Point Gardens, located at the tip of the peninsula where the Ashley and Cooper rivers converge into the Atlantic Ocean. Look farther east over the water and you'll see Fort Sumter, where the first shots of the Civil War were fired in 1861. (A visit is just a half-hour ferry's ride away.) Walk farther east along the waterfront, and you'll find the famous pastel-colored homes of Rainbow Row and Waterfront Park.

As for where to lay your head, the hippest spot is the Vendue, an "art hotel" set in seven warehouses dating back to the 1780s. Steps from the water in the French Quarter, this stylish abode houses more than 300 works of art and offers several rotating exhibits per year. Be sure to hit the Rooftop, a bar that's become the place to see and be seen in Charleston. But if it's historic luxury you're looking for, book one of the 21 richly decorated rooms in the Wentworth Mansion, the former Empire-style home of a wealthy cotton magnate and shipper. Expect plenty of Southern hospitality, from the full hot breakfast through afternoon tea, evening wine and hors d'oeuvres, and late-night sherry, port and brandy. And for formal meals, there's the inn's restaurant, Circa 1886, set in what was once the estate's carriage house.

Charleston's best chow, however, comes from the new crop of rustic, laid-back spots such as the Ordinary, a seafood and oyster hall housed in a former bank. Everything on the small plate menu is scrumptious, whether it's the smoked oysters in a jar with shallot-parsley vinaigrette, banh mi-style fried oyster sliders on Hawaiian coconut rolls or pickled shrimp with vegetables. FIG also wins raves for its earthy, seasonal fare, like slow-baked grouper with butterbean ratatouille and suckling pig confit with broccoli rabe. Then there is Leon's, a fried chicken and oyster joint in a former auto body shop, and the Macintosh, home of the bacon happy hour and celebrated for South Carolina specialties such as warm tomato pie and puffy, fluffy bone marrow bread pudding.

Before you leave, don't forget to stock up on some locally made treasures at the Historic City Market, housed in a Greek Revival Market Hall building completed in 1841. Among the 100 or so booths, you'll find vendors selling bags of sweet sesame-flecked benne wafers, sacks of grits and hand-woven South Carolina sweetgrass baskets. Then, for a sweet memory of your visit, pop into River Sweets on North Market Street to nab some buttery brown-sugar pecan pralines, best eaten the day they're made—easily done. ◆

UIGHUR, PLEASE

CHEF CHANG'S ON BACK BAY HOPSCOTCHES DELICIOUSLY ACROSS CHINA.

Ask your typical Boston food geek to list her favorite world cuisines, and near the top of the list will be Chinese, likely the cuisines of Taiwan, Guangzhou, Sichuan or Shandong, the best-represented regions among our traditional Chinese restaurants. If you wanted to get said food geek's attention, you might casually mention having recently tried dishes from the Henan, Shaanxi and Xinjiang provinces, a swath that stretches from central China to its rugged, remote northwest. And if you wanted to shock her, you could brag that you found these rare-in-Boston specialties at Chef Chang's on Back Bay, right on Mass. Ave., in the food nerd's least favorite Boston neighborhood.

The menu's first item hints that you're already far away from the greasy familiarities of American-Chinese fare: Xinjiang big plate chicken with noodles ($23), a bright-red stew of chicken, tomatoes, potatoes, onions, peppers, chilies and cumin, made substantial with the addition of wide, flat hand-pulled wheat noodles. It effectively combines the Central Asian accents of Uighur cuisine with Sichuan spice and heat, and it's amazing. A cold appetizer of beef and tendon with chili sauce ($10) is actually the famous Sichuan dish fuqi feipian (don't ask what that means). Chang's uses shank and sometimes runs out of tendon. Even without offal, the result lands a ringing one-two punch with mala sauce, its fiery chilies and mentholated Sichuan peppercorns delivering an exhilarating numbing heat.

Many dishes here are from China's cooler northern regions where wheat is the staple crop, hence the many noodles, dumplings and flatbreads. Typical is an order of Northern Chinese-style pan-fried buns ($8), four fluffy, bready, lightly bottom-browned dumplings with a little pork meatball inside, plus a side of soy-based dipping sauce: mild but hearty. More piquant and intriguing is the Shaanxi Chinese hamburger ($6 for two), a dense English-muffin-shaped flatbread filled with chopped braised pork in a sweet/tangy/spicy-hot sauce with cabbage, chilies and cilantro, like a brilliant Asian take on the sloppy Joe. Xinjiang sauteed special flat noodles ($13) benefit from the excellent al dente texture of hand-pulled noodles, reminiscent of fat fettuccine, but otherwise present a pedestrian admixture of stir-fried vegetables in a soy-based brown sauce.

Lamb with cumin sauce and Chinese pancake ($21) features tender squares of lamb with cabbage, cumin, cilantro, chilies and Sichuan peppercorns, served with a puffy steamed flatbread that you fold around spoonfuls of the dish like a taco. That same steamed bread shows up alongside braised pork Mao's family style with Chinese pancake ($17), a generous heap of tender, mahogany-toned, skin-on pork belly chunks framed by jade-green baby bok choy. The bygone Chairman doubtless loved it for its Hunanese "red cooked" preparation—long braising with a gorgeously sweet/spicy sauce of caramelized sugar, star anise, cinnamon and chilies. Bashu flavored chicken ($17) is similarly attractive, a huge pile of dry-fried chunks of chicken and whole green capsicum chilies spilling cornucopia-like out of a conical wicker lattice. This dish is another knockout, boasting well-seasoned crispness without a thick batter coating and gaining additional power with that icy-hot combination of chilies and Sichuan peppercorns.

Seafood gets respectful treatment too, as in a country-style sliced fish soup ($13) with delicate white fish, tofu, scallions and glass noodles in a ginger-accented chicken broth. Meanwhile, some serious finesse shows up in sweet and sour Mandarin whole fish with handmade dragon whiskers noodles ($27). The whole tilapia is a marvel of deboning and stir-frying, with even the head and tail offering good eating. Prettily plated, it's showered with slivered red pepper, sweet peas and fresh cilantro, its syrupy sauce nicely sopped up by a nest of lightly fried, gossamer-thin hand-pulled noodles.

Beverage options include a few food-friendly lagers like Tsingtao ($7.50), a passel of plonky wines by the glass ($7-12), fruit smoothies ($4) and sugary bubble teas ($4). The 30-seat basement space is modest by Back Bay standards, fancy by Chinatown's (name another recent opening with white tablecloths), while the service is friendly and workmanlike, with adequate English. Ignore the menu's token nods to American-Chinese for the timid, like crab Rangoon and General Gao's chicken. Chef Chang's on Back Bay is doing something far more interesting, taking on a dozen regional Chinese cuisines—including several little-seen ones with fascinating flavors—and justifying its higher-than-average prices with fine technique. You might want to get over there before the inevitable Chinese expat and American food-nerd stampede. ◆

Q: I HAVE ACNE SCARS ON MY CHEEKS. EVEN AFTER I PUT ON MAKE-UP THEY ARE STILL NOTICEABLE; WHAT CAN I DO?

A: Millions of people suffer from acne scars on their face as a result of teen or adult acne. There is no effective way of covering them up because it is the texture of the skin that is affected. However, I have good news for you.

There is a treatment that can greatly reduce, and usually totally eliminate, acne scars: fractional laser. Pulses from this specialized fractional laser break down scar tissue, triggering new, healthy skin to form in its place. Voila, the scars are gone forever!

Fractional laser treatments can be even be used on surgical scars or scars elsewhere on your body with good success. There is no charge for a consultation; we would be happy to see how we can help.

THE JUDGE* ★½

Starring Robert Downey Jr., Robert Duvall, Vera Farmiga, Vincent D'Onofrio, Jeremy Strong, Emma Tremblay, Sarah Lancaster, Grace Zabriskie, Dax Shepard, Leighton Meester, David Krumholtz, Melissa Leo, Balthazar Getty, Ken Howard and Billy Bob Thornton. Written by Nick Schenk and Bill Dubuque, based on a story by Nick Schenk and David Dobkin. Directed by David Dobkin. At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row, Somerville and in the suburbs.

Movies / Brett Michel

INDEFENSIBLE

AS FATHER AND SON, DUVALL AND DOWNEY JR. SHOULD FEEL GUILTY.

NOT LONG AGO, IF YOU'D HEARD THAT Robert Downey Jr. had urinated on another actor, it might have been true. The actor's past struggles with sobriety are well-documented, as is his improbable career resurrection during the past decade. His successes as Iron Man have made him the poster boy for Marvel Comics' continued takeover of Hollywood, with the 49-year-old becoming the screen's biggest star. Still, there's only so long the celebrated smartass will be able to squeeze into metal underpants.

Enter Team Downey, a production company he's formed with his wife, Susan. It sounds more like a fabric softener, and their first project is light and fuzzy. The likable rogue has fashioned a film in which he chews some local scenery—exteriors shot in Dedham, interiors at an Attleboro funeral home, the Plymouth County Courthouse and a diner in Shelburne Falls—as an imposingly articulate Big City Lawyer who defends the lowest of the low.

Downey's Hank Palmer begins the film standing at a urinal inside a Chicago courthouse when prosecutor Mike Kattan (David Krumholtz) storms in to confront Palmer as he relieves himself. Turning to face his opposition, Hank pees all over the man. Soiled but undeterred, Mike demands to know how it feels "only representing people who are guilty?"

"Let me finish that cliche for you," Hank replies. "They're the only ones who can afford me."

If only the cliches had ended there.

Instead, the story cooked up by director David Dobkin and Nick Schenk (writer of Gran Torino), with a screenplay by Schenk and newcomer Bill Dubuque, trades in predictable formulas made slightly more palatable by Downey's acidic wit.

Hank's having a bad day. Not only is his wife (Sarah Lancaster) cheating, but she's threatening to take custody of their 7-year-old daughter, Lauren (Emma Tremblay). All of this before he receives a voicemail informing him that his mother (Catherine Cummings) has died back home in Carlinville, Indiana.

No, I haven't heard of Carlinville, either. Still, it might seem a bit familiar. Driving a rental car through his hometown (with help from a cheap-looking visual effect), Hank watches the local yokels going about their routines, muttering to himself that "nothing changes." Sure, if you happen to overlook the fact that Indiana has begun to look an awful lot like Massachusetts...

Meeting up with older brother Glen (Vincent D'Onofrio) and younger brother Dale (Jeremy Strong), he shakes his head, saying, "This family's a fucking Picasso painting"—and we haven't even been introduced to their father yet.

Glen, a promising baseball player during his youth, has settled into a puffy frame as the owner of a tire and auto-body shop. Dale is a developmentally disabled adult who's been given one character trait, aside from being "slow": He films every moment of his life with a ubiquitous Super-8 camera, a perfect device for lazy screenwriters who fill in backstory by having characters watch home movies of their younger selves as Bon Iver's "Holocene" plays on the soundtrack. Here, this bonding "technique," complete with the Iver song, is deployed no less than three times so viewers can completely grasp its subtleties.

Robert Duvall [is] well-matched with Downey—or he would be if the two had better material to play.

It must be said: Dobkin, Schenk and Dubuque are masters of underlining everything (and I mean everything) to tie off the numerous threads that play into the dozen or so endings they deploy in the third act. And if this requires spending a half-hour developing an antagonistic relationship between Hank and his dad, Judge Joseph Palmer—known simply as "Judge" to everyone in the community after 40 years behind the bench—then so be it.

The judge is played by 83-year-old Robert Duvall, who's well-matched with Downey—or he would be, if the two had better material to play. Standing vigil alone at his beloved wife's grave after the funeral service, he vows that he'll see her again tomorrow "and every day after that," as Hank silently watches his dad from a distance. Alas, this ends up being a hollow promise when the judge is arrested the next day on suspicion of vehicular manslaughter—and possibly murder.

Whether he killed someone, intentionally or not (and he can't remember what happened), the judge is guided by the principles of morality and justice. However, Hank, reluctantly acting in his father's defense, is driven by a need to win, a desire Glen never fulfilled professionally once his major league dreams crashed in a car accident that was—yes—caused by Hank. It's that kind of film. Actually, it's worse than that kind of film, since this revelation, which has been telegraphed to death, is finally made explicitly clear during one of those convenient home movie viewings that occurs as a well-timed tornado rages outside.

Lest you think I've spoiled anything, know that there are plenty more equally obvious revelations to go around. And I haven't even mentioned Carla (Leighton Meester), the flirty young waitress who plays tonsil hockey with Hank when the Palmer boys go out for drinks, or the subsequent discovery that she's the daughter of his first love, Sam (Vera Farmiga), who's also interested in making up for lost time.

Dobkin—director of comedies like Shanghai Knights, Wedding Crashers and Fred Claus—dives into dramatic territory here, but his heavy-handed examination of father/son relations belly-flops, ending up largely laughable. Between the diapers in his last picture, The Change-Up, and the incontinence that rears its bottom here, he mostly seems to excel when directing actors to bond over poop—or pee. Either way, it's a shitty, predictable business. ◆

PRODIGAL SON

SOUTHERN WANDERER FINDS ROUGH-HEWN VOICE AS BLUESY PUNK BREAKOUT.

THE SONG BEGINS WITH A HUSHED, halting voice over a quietly strummed guitar. "Give me something that I can tap my toes to, and scream at the top of my lungs," Benjamin Booker crackles, "till it sounded like I've been smoking from the day I was born." Sure enough, by the time "Spoon Out My Eyeballs" passes the halfway mark, he's crowing in gravelly testimony over a garage-punk gallop.

Booker, 25, exudes more youthful bluster on other tracks from his eponymous August debut, from the lively, headlong thump of "Violent Shiver" to the blues and R&B shadings of "Chippewa," cushioned with organ in the studio. Grimy and passionate, the album surges with chugging, swirling waves of sonic adrenaline.

Yet the New Orleans-based singer/guitarist wasn't exactly born to rock. Sure, Booker embraced skateboarding and punk shows as a teenager growing up in Tampa before he landed at the University of Florida in Gainesville to study journalism. But he didn't really start writing songs and playing modest solo acoustic gigs until two years ago, when he was filling his spare time in New Orleans, scraping by at a nonprofit after failing to secure a job in journalism.

Then the stars aligned quickly for Booker. He came back home and recorded an acoustic demo in his parents' bathroom that caught the attention of a West Coast music blog and led to exposure on Sirius. And just last year, he connected with Tampa drummer Max Norton to form a band. "Electric shows are just more enjoyable, to dance and have a good time," says Booker, whose influences include punk rockers the Gun Club and bluesman Blind Willie Johnson. "I didn't really like the acoustic, quiet vibe." After only a few months, a scout from ATO Records—home to My Morning Jacket and Alabama Shakes—caught the duo live and signed Booker to a deal.

"I definitely feel like, even since the last time I came to Cambridge, it's probably a better show, musically and vocally."

Now he's crisscrossing the U.S. and the U.K. with his live trio (completed by fellow Tampa native Alex Spoto on bass), earning such plum opportunities as playing Late Show with David Letterman and opening dates for Jack White.

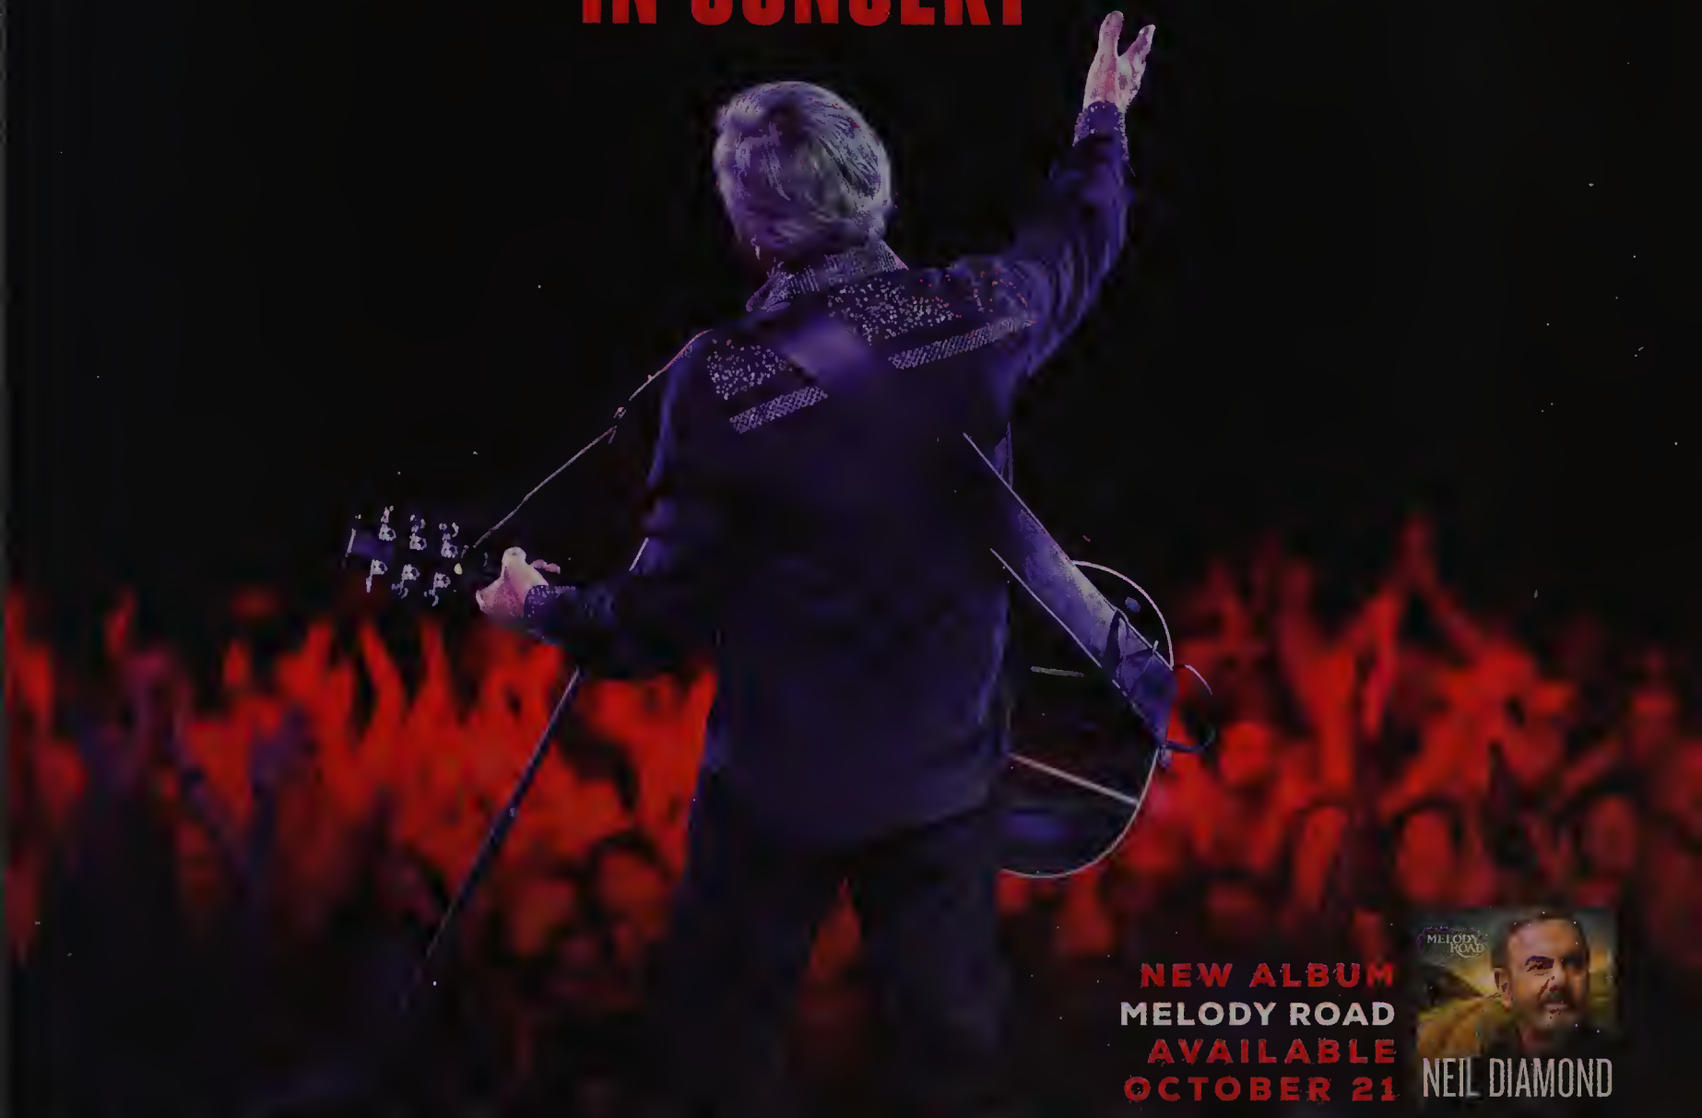
"I haven't had time to think about everything else that's going on," Booker says from the road, on his way to Minneapolis. "Really, I've just been taking it day to day. I know there's somewhere we need to be, and I just focus on that, getting to the show on time and playing."

Booker returns to Cambridge to headline T.T. the Bear's Place on Oct. 22, following two opening slots at the Sinclair as well as an acclaimed turn at the Newport Folk Festival. He recognizes that his young band is continuing to adapt to the spotlight.

"I wasn't comfortable at the very beginning," Booker says of his band's near-nonstop touring since February, comparing it to starting any new job. "But we've played so many shows this year, I definitely feel like, even since the last time I came to Cambridge, it's probably a better show, musically and vocally."

Booker's family didn't inspire a lot of confidence when it came to his musical ambitions. His parents were conservative, his father a retired Navy officer, and Booker reflects the tension of that relationship in the primal, barreling "Have You Seen My Son?" The song depicts parents "calling on the Lord, asking for answers," fighting with their son down the highway between Florida and New Orleans.

"They've gotten a lot more supportive," Booker says. "They're happy that I'm working. It makes sense, I guess. If I had a kid that was working at a shitty job and then decided to play music, I probably would not be super-happy about that. It's a risky route."



Especially risky in comparison to his sister, an opera singer, although Booker's sudden, burgeoning fame signals a potentially lucrative destination.

"I was never a singer—it still feels weird," the guitarist says. "Every time my sister sees something [on television] where I'm singing, I'm like 'Oh no, she went to school for it, and I'm just some shmuck playing in a punk band!'" ◆

DEPOSIT DESPOT

HOW I GOT ROBBED ON MY LABOR DAY VACATION.

In the wild world of online house swapping, I've played the roles of both renter and owner on HomeAway and VRBO (Airbnb is still a little too freaky for me). So I feel like I have a pretty good grasp of both parties' expectations. As an owner, you make sure everything works. As a renter, you leave the place as you found it, save for a standard scrubbing in preparation for the next arrival. I've never lost a dollar of a security deposit. Record scratch—until now!

We rented a place in Carolina Beach, North Carolina, during Labor Day weekend. If you want a mental picture of Carolina Beach, imagine Nantasket in Hull, but circa 1985. There's a carnival downtown, and you're allowed to drive on the beach. There's a drive-through beer store called Brew Thru. The weekend we were visiting, there was a stabbing on the beach. But one little stabbing isn't going to keep me away from a vacation spot. Look at how many people didn't get stabbed—nearly all of them! That's a pretty good record.

We rented a second-row duplex. It was fine. There was a single-wide trailer bordering it in the back, but the wheels were covered up and it didn't even have any Confederate flags patching up holes in the roof. The road out front was busy, but I liked to sit on the deck and watch the Camaros drive past. It was an agreeable trip, except for the school bus that dominated the shared driveway. Apparently the neighbors rented to a high school sports team whose coach didn't feel like parking in the huge empty lot a block away. But I'm an easy-going guy, so I didn't complain that leaving the driveway required a spotter and a willingness to rake the car along the bushes on the way out. We weren't in Duxbury, you know?

Several weeks after the trip, we hadn't received our $450 deposit, so I emailed the owner to cordially remind him of my address. In response, I received a 700-word manifesto about the supposed depravities we visited upon his house, along with a conclusion that probably none of our deposit would be returned—he still had to think about it. Oh, let me grovel in supposition, benevolent landowner, that you might kindly return whatever sum pleases you. Let me guess how much of my deposit you're giving back: Zero? Did I get it?

When I pressed him to put numbers on what, exactly, we'd done to cost him $450, he came back with a couple of things. The first—and I must quell my boiling rage just to type this—was $85 for a "handyman visit" to lower some window blinds and aim a showerhead that he said was spraying a wall. Thank goodness for the handyman or those blinds might still be up, the showerhead all askew. I imagine a man with overalls and a tool belt walking in and saying, "Dang nub, these blinds are the uppest I ever seen! These are at least $85 worth of up, if I had to guess."

The second item was $175 for cleaning, on top of the $150 included in the rental fee. I pointed out that at prevailing local rates, $315 would buy at least 16 hours of cleaning—two full work days. He said sand needed to be vacuumed out of one of the tubs. So that's like 20 seconds. But I guess there was more.

In fact, I know there was more. I'm ashamed to even admit this, but he also said some of the windows were unlocked. And leaving windows unlocked is like something ISIS would do. I can definitely see how an unlocked window is money out of his pocket, when you figure in the wear and tear on the lock. Pull that stunt only a few thousand times, and you're gonna need all new locks on those things.

He claims second- and third-floor balcony doors were also unlocked, inviting easy burglary by thieves armed with 40-foot ladders or rappelling equipment. That didn't happen, but imagine if it did.

When I publicly whined about this mugging on Facebook, WBZ-TV news anchor David Wade suggested a move to protect myself in the future. A few years ago, he rented a place and got the vibe that the owner was angling to keep the deposit, so before checkout he took a photo of that day's newspaper in each (clean, undamaged) room. When the owner tried to steal his deposit, he had proof that the guy was being a malicious lunatic. Whereas in my case, it's just my word versus an imaginary handyman's.

There was a single-wide trailer bordering it in the back, but the wheels were covered up and it didn't even have any Confederate flags patching up holes in the roof.

Not that I'm down on VRBO or Carolina Beach. In fact, if you're not thrilled with your job, I might recommend moving down there and starting a cleaning business. From what I hear, the pay's great. ◆

Soroff On / Tom Bergeron

TV HOST TOM BERGERON SOUNDS OFF ON THE KEY TO LONGEVITY, HIS TREKKIE TIME AND WHOOPI.

EMMY AWARD WINNER TOM BERGERON, 59, IS THE HOST of the wildly popular Dancing with the Stars as well as America's Funniest Home Videos, whose 25th anniversary season premieres on Oct. 12. Born and raised in Haverhill, Bergeron spent more than a decade at WBZ-TV (Ch. 4) early in his career, hosting shows such as People Are Talking. He became the host of Breakfast Time on Fox in 1994, a guest anchor on Good Morning America in 1997 and the host of the Hollywood Squares reboot in 1998. In 2009, he had more primetime hours on TV than any other host, and he's emceed everything from the Miss America Pageant and Lottery Live to the daytime and primetime Emmy Awards. The author of I'm Hosting as Fast as I Can!: Zen and the Art of Staying Sane in Hollywood, he divides his time between California and Connecticut with his wife and two daughters.

JONATHAN SOROFF: There's an internet meme that says, "Dancing with the Stars is an American game show for ex-celebrities who want to be back in the spotlight but are too shy to leak a sex tape." Which star from the show is most likely to do a sex tape?
TOM BERGERON: Cloris Leachman. Definitely.

I have an idea for a hybrid show—So You Think You Can Dance with the Stars, where people accost celebrities on the red carpet and try to dance with them... That's a great idea. We could combine it with Cops, so you could see them getting arrested, too. I'm in. Call the production company.

Why are ballroom dancing costumes so freaking ugly? I don't know about traditional ballroom dance costumes, but ours aren't. Some of them are pretty revealing though. I remember once, with a very beautiful woman, when I said, "Tune in next time, when she'll be wearing the other half of that costume."

So can you dance? If there's enough tequila around.

Who are some celebrities who've been rejected from Dancing with the Stars? I'm sure there are some, but even if I knew who, I probably wouldn't say, at the risk of humiliating them twice.

Has there ever been a celebrity who annoyed you or behaved like a total diva? Not really. But there have been a few pro athletes who—when they realized how hard it was going to be—couldn't get back to the golf course fast enough.

To what do you attribute your success and longevity on TV? I have some very incriminating photos of the network higher-ups.

Which is more important: Your looks or your voice? I'd say neither. I'm going with my personality. Especially since I've always said I have a face made for radio.

How did you make picking the lottery numbers exciting? Oh, God. Yes, I did that. From what I recall, I'd say things like, "Welcome to As the Balls Turn," or something ridiculous, to try and inject some personality into an otherwise purely mechanical process.

"Put me in a cocktail party setting and my upper lip looks like Nixon's during the first debate. I'm awful at small talk."

You're the consummate television host. Do you and your wife entertain a lot at home? Not really. Lois is great at those sorts of things. My problem is that I'm OK in front of potentially millions of people, or maybe at an industry thing, but put me in a cocktail party setting and my upper lip looks like Nixon's during the first televised debate. I'm awful at small talk.

How have smartphones changed America's Funniest Home Videos? It's kind of ironic how many people are using smartphones to film themselves doing really stupid things, but it definitely has had an impact. There's actually an AFV app available for download, and they get something like 2,000 videos a week.

So you've had some odd gigs, but how did you wind up on an episode of Star Trek? [Laughs] By chance. Whoopi Goldberg and I were working together, and she said, "Let's go check out the set." We were with the producer, Rick Berman, and I made a comment about the show. He said, "You're a fan? You want to be on the show?" And I was like, "Wow. It's as easy as that?" So I did several hours of prosthetic makeup and had a role in the opening scene as an alien trader. It was very cool.

Speaking of Whoopi Goldberg, you two seemed really tight on Hollywood Squares. Are you still in touch? Oh, yeah. I'll be seeing her soon, when I go and do The View, but we text or communicate pretty regularly, like when Robin Williams died, or when the show was in flux, or times like that. I have to say, Whoopi is the most generous person I've ever worked with. When we started out with Hollywood Squares, no one knew who I was, and she kept me by her side at all times. I remember one event where she was asked to pose for a picture with the film director Robert Townsend. Whoopi held me firmly by her side, and I could hear the photographer saying, "Don't worry. I can crop the white guy out." [Laughs]

When you redid Hollywood Squares, did you really think you could improve upon Paul Lynde? No. All those folks—Paul Lynde, Jonathan Winters, Buddy Hackett—they were impossible to replace or recreate. The saying is true that you can only be a virgin once. But what we could do, and did do, was an updated version, and it was really good.

What were your favorite TV shows growing up? I'm really glad you asked me that because this is for a Boston audience. The people I really looked up to when I was a kid were local broadcasting personalities like Larry Glick, who eventually became a good friend of mine, and Rex Trailer, who had the kid's show Boomtown, or Frank Avruch, who was the original Bozo. The idea of being on a local Boston TV show was the thing that really excited me.

If you could dance with one person, dead or alive, who would it be and what dance? I'm going to say a rumba with Grace Kelly. ◆

THE RASK FACTOR

Why being the best isn't enough for the Bruins goalie.

BY STEVE CONROY PHOTOGRAPHED BY JOHN HUET

BEFORE SITTING down for our interview, the Bruins goalie flashed the metal nameplate affixed to the replica Georges Vezina Trophy he received in June.

After a quick perusal, this eagle-eyed reporter assumed the lanky Finn was giving a rare display of pride and said, "Oh, that's nice."

But Tuukka Rask persisted. "No, look! They spelled it wrong."

Rask is the odds-on favorite this season to repeat as the Vezina Trophy winner.

Indeed, they did. Whoever engraved the trophy given to the NHL's top goaltender, well, he or she must not be a regular NESN viewer familiar with broadcaster Jack Edwards' iconic call after a Bruins victory: "Two Us, two Ks, two points!" The engraver left out one of the Ks.

Rask wasn't exactly mad over the unintended slight. Then again, he wasn't exactly happy, either. Is it a little extra motivation for the man who was the best goalie in the NHL last year?

Maybe, but Rask contends he doesn't need those kinds of things to get his engine revved. The humbling game of hockey provides all the motivation he needs. And for Rask, there's always been something to prove.

It's not that Rask arrived from his native Finland with a weak pedigree. When the B's obtained his rights from the Toronto Maple Leafs in a deal (pure pilferage!) for Andrew Raycroft at the 2006 draft, the 2005 first-round pick was already considered one of the best goaltending prospects in the world.

But drafting teenagers is a famously inexact science, and projecting how young goalies will fare is even dicier. And while his native Finland is as good at producing goalies as it is vodka, there was also the question of adapting to the smaller North American ice sheet. He quickly answered that.

After proving himself for the Bruins' minor-league affiliate in Providence, he had to show he had what it takes to be an NHL goalie. He did that.

When his wafer-thin body appeared to wear down during the Bruins' epic collapse to the Philadelphia Flyers in the 2010 playoffs, he had to prove that he could withstand the rigors of the NHL's demanding two-month postseason. It took him a couple of years to get another chance, but he took the B's all the way to the Stanley Cup Finals in 2013, falling two games short of the ultimate goal.

That was in the lockout-shortened season, however, and the question of whether he could excel during an 82-game schedule remained. He responded last season by finishing in the top five in goals against average (2.04), save percentage (.930) and wins (36) and leading the league in shutouts (seven), while winning the Vezina in a vote with which few could argue.

But Rask isn't satisfied with what he's accomplished so far—because he's still never won the Stanley Cup as the starting goalie.

"It's no secret that you want to be the best and win those awards, but it doesn't matter if you don't win the big one," says Rask, the odds-on favorite to win the Vezina again this year. "During your career, you're going to be judged by your closest fans and people around the league by 'Has he done anything?' Meaning the Stanley Cup, of course. But I think when you win something like [the Vezina], it just pushes you to want to be even better because the expectations just get higher and higher in people's eyes, and they expect you to be that good. People expected me to be good when I came here. I have been good and now I've won the Vezina, so it's not like people will be expecting less out of me. So the challenges keep on coming. And that's what this is all about."

"It's no secret that you want to be the best and win those awards, but it doesn't matter if you don't win the big one."

Last season, Rask was in the top five in wins, save percentage and goals against average.

Bruins general manager Peter Chiarelli looks at the step-by-step rise of Rask—from farmhand to backup to well-compensated star—and nowhere can he find a hint of complacency. "He has a very common-sense approach," Chiarelli says. "He knows what he has to do, knows what he's done, knows what he needs to do in the future."

That future includes a commitment to a city he's come to love. Now in the second year of an eight-year $56 million contract, Rask lives in Charlestown with his girlfriend Jasmiina and their first child, daughter Vivien, born in the middle of the playoff series against Montreal last May. He likes the area's European feel and being surrounded by water. "I can walk to Fenway if I want, and I can be there in a half hour. Everything's so close," he says. "And I love the neighborhoods—North End, Charlestown, all over the place. People are great, the food is great, and it's a great sports town. They really pay attention to their sports." He's even literally dropped anchor here, having bought a boat—a 30-foot Sea Ray docked in the Seaport—with former teammate Shawn Thornton from team equipment manager Keith Robinson shortly after the 2011 Cup-winning season.

But while he's loving life in Boston, it hasn't dulled his fiercely competitive nature, evident since an infamous milk-crate-throwing tantrum in Providence in 2009 that became an instant YouTube classic. Indeed, in postgame scrums, Rask can be blunt and often comically profane. When asked early last season what he'd do with the shootout, the root cause of many of his meltdowns, Rask said: "Gas it right away. Midseason. Take it away. I don't f---ing want it." After the Bruins' improbable Game 7 overtime win over the Maple Leafs in 2013, he said of overtime: "It's do or die. You're either a hero...or an asshole." And after the double-overtime loss to Montreal in May, he summed up his performance by saying: "When you suck, you suck."

When asked about his affinity for English curse words, Rask shrugs. "Yeah, the filter's not there all the time, but that's just because I hear it all the time from [Thornton]," he says with a smile. "I tend to speak the truth, too. I don't like to sugarcoat it too much. Maybe I should, but whatever."

It's the kind of personality that his teammates can appreciate, even if it's sometimes deployed at them.

"He's really energetic, really emotional, especially after shootout losses or overtime losses," defenseman Dennis Seidenberg says with a chuckle. "You always see him crushing his sticks over the boards and stumbling into the boards. So he has a history with that. But that's what you want. You want a guy that's hungry for winning and a guy that's emotionally engaged. And that's what Tuukka is."

While Rask's temper can sometimes make Chiarelli cringe, the GM has known the goalie long enough to realize there's more to Rask's temperament. "Despite some of the outbursts that you've seen, he's got a real even-keeled quality about him and his approach to things. He's very confident in his play, so he knows he's eventually going to come around [if he's struggling] because he's a good player, a very good goalie, so I think he's patient," Chiarelli says. "Now, having said all that, he's got an inner fire that burns that I've seen on a number of different levels. Sometimes it can be uncalled for, but I've seen it enough that I know where it's coming from and that it's an outlet for him. And it's healthy for him."

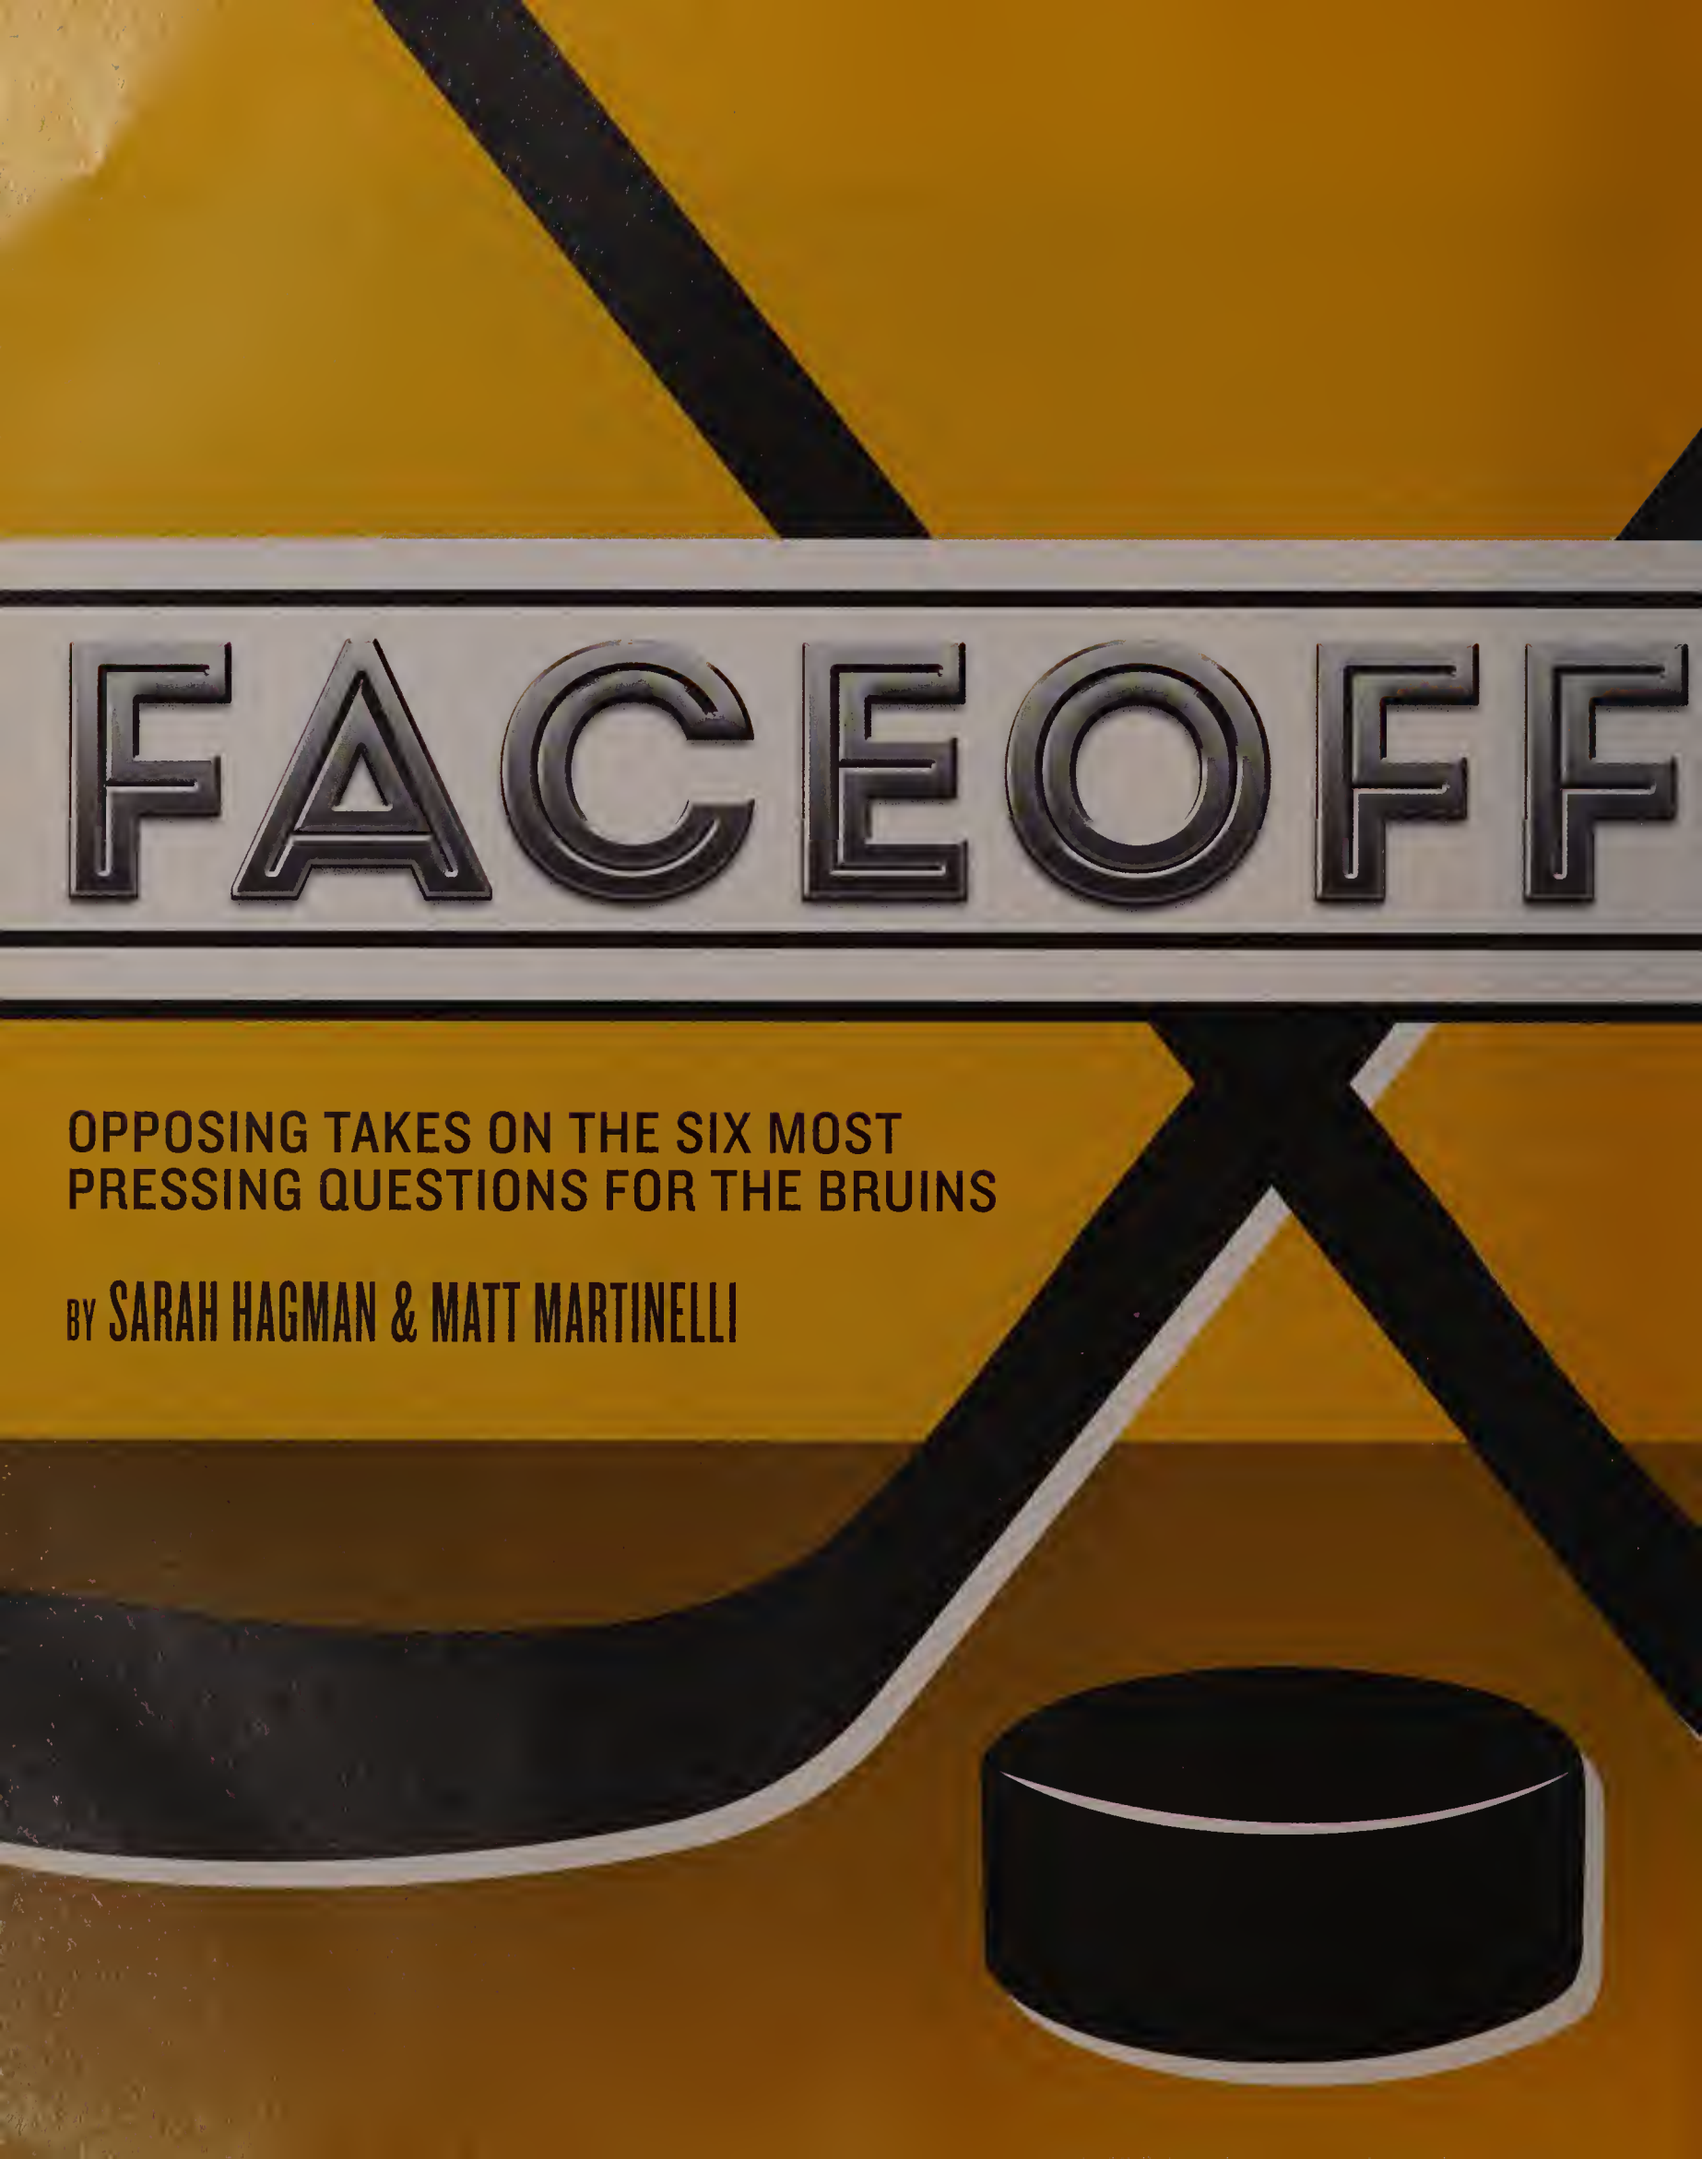
One thing currently fueling that fire: the dreaded Montreal Canadiens, who ended the Bruins' last season far short of the Stanley Cup Finals.

During his regular-season career, Rask has amassed a 102-60-22 record with a .928 save percentage and 2.11 goals against average. That's pretty darn good. But it would be even better if not for Montreal. Not counting last year's playoff series against them, he's 3-10-3 with a .908 save percentage and 2.63 goals against average.

Rask is at a loss to explain the numbers, although he believes they're not completely reflective of his play. "It's just the Canadiens, and people like to talk about them, and, no, I don't have the best record against them," he says with a shrug. "I've said it before, but I've played some good games against them. But they have a good team, and their goalie [Carey Price] is really good, too."

To Chiarelli, the entire team has some sort of mental block with Montreal, one that it has to face. "I think it's a challenge for all of us to get by it,

> "You want a guy that's hungry for winning and a guy that's emotionally engaged. And that's what Tuukka is."



[Rask] included. It's not an indictment on Tuukka. It's a curse or something, I don't know," Chiarelli says with a mordant chuckle and shake of the head. "But it's always a challenge, and this group has faced challenges before and gotten over it. The biggest one was the Philadelphia series [in 2010]. I think we really grew from that and responded, so I'm confident that the group and Tuukka will be able to overcome this."

And while Rask may keep his emotions below the surface in this particular case, make no mistake: They are bubbling down below. "It definitely eats at him, but he'll come out stronger and hungrier, if that's at all possible," Seidenberg says. "He really wants to win something for this franchise, and he's doing everything he can do to do so. In the end, it will make him stronger."

And so it is for Tuukka Rask (that's two U's and two K's). He may be at the top of the hockey universe now, but he always has something to prove. ◆

During his regular-season career, Rask has had 102 wins and a .928 save percentage.

FACEOFF
OPPOSING TAKES ON THE SIX MOST PRESSING QUESTIONS FOR THE BRUINS
BY SARAH HAGMAN & MATT MARTINELLI

HOW WILL THE BRUINS REPLACE JAROME IGINLA AND JOHNNY BOYCHUK?

SARAH HAGMAN:

The good news is both solutions are on the roster. While Boychuk will be missed, the B's have enough defensemen to make up for his departure. And they'll be able to make up for Iginla's 61 points by looking to David Krejci. Judging from his preseason interviews, it seems he's looking forward to aiming for the top shelf more. The team will also need to lean on Loui Eriksson. Both are great playmakers, which should make for an interesting dynamic if they join forces on the first line. It's one we got a glimpse of in April when Eriksson joined the top line with Krejci and Lucic for a game against Philadelphia, and the line notched 9 points.

MATT MARTINELLI:

Although the loss of Boychuk stung fans and players, he was traded because there was a glut of able-bodied defensemen ready to take his spot. So while Boychuk's replacement will come from the current roster, a worthy replacement for Iginla, who signed with Colorado in July, will have to come from a midseason trade. Iginla tied with Patrice Bergeron for the most goals (30) on the team last season, and he did it while taking 34 fewer shots. He also led the team with eight game-winners, which means he scored when the team needed it most. And you can't ignore Iginla's effect on the Bruins' power-play unit. Before he arrived last season, it was the team's biggest weakness, ranking 26th out of 30 teams. With Iginla on the top unit, the B's were the third best power-play team in the league. Put simply, he excelled at a lot of things that the rest of the guys on the current roster haven't had success with in the past.

WILL MISSING TRAINING CAMP AFFECT REILLY SMITH AND TOREY KRUG?

SARAH HAGMAN:

No. Sure, it would have been ideal if Krug and Smith had shown up with the rest of the team, but in the end, the 11 days they missed because of contract impasses won't make or break the 82-game season. Each player has a full NHL season under his belt, with Smith suiting up for every game last season and Krug notching 79, and their new deals should serve as extra motivation. Both players will want to prove that they're worth re-signing at the end of their one-year contracts—or ensure that they can get their payday when they hit the open market next year. Their training camp absence also allowed other young players to get experience and show off their skills, proving that the team has depth even beyond its 23-man roster. It happened; let's move on.

MATT MARTINELLI:

Of course. You can't get better without practice, and these guys missed a couple of weeks of it. At 23 years old, they're not grizzled vets who might be better served by resting their bodies. These are young players who needed to further develop their games. Were they both very good last season? You bet, but they could be better. Krug is a defenseman who needs to improve his defense. And Smith's performance dipped in the second half of the season. Listen, it's not really their fault. The NHL's system is broken. How else to explain why the Bruins were forced to decide whether to give multimillion-dollar deals to entry-level free agents who have less than three seasons of experience combined? But the endgame was always going to be Krug and Smith settling for one-year deals. And missing valuable preseason time will only hurt them and the team this season.

ARE THEY STILL THE BIG BAD BRUINS?

SARAH HAGMAN:

The Bruins' mix of skill and brute force has made them tough opponents during the past few seasons, although they're no longer as feisty as they were at the start of this decade. And now, with resident enforcer Shawn Thornton moving on, they may not look the same physically. But that doesn't mean you won't see the gloves drop. There are a number of guys willing to get in the opposing team's face, including Brad Marchand—even though the 5-foot-9 sparkplug is one of the shortest players on the team. Plus, they offer four solid offensive lines that can outskate and wear down the other team, giving them a different type of physical edge.

MATT MARTINELLI:

Nope, and that's good—at least for most Bruins' fans consciences. Unfortunately, physicality in hockey is more synonymous with fighting than good defense. And at a time when most sports are trying to reduce concussions and brain injuries, should we really tolerate the sideshow of two guys squaring off and pummeling each other? The NHL is facing lawsuits from former players over brain injuries; Google "Derek Boogaard" if you want to find out the toll that physical play can take on players. Shawn Thornton, who signed with Florida during the offseason, was the only throwback enforcer the Bruins had last year, and his presence—and blood-curdling assault on Brooks Orpik—had diminishing returns for the team. Coach Claude Julien will continue to favor players who can contribute on offense and defense, but playing good defense doesn't mean you have to get into fights.

IS ZDENO CHARA IN DECLINE?

SARAH HAGMAN:

We've been waiting for time to take its toll on Chara for a few seasons now, but the 17-year NHL veteran shows no signs of slowing down. The captain may be celebrating his 38th birthday this March, but as history shows, Chara ages like a fine Scotch. He beat his own—and the league's—fastest shot record five times in a row at the All-Star Skills Competition, returning in 2015, and that's just one instance of Chara setting his own bar higher and higher. Last year, he and Kevan Miller topped the pull-up contest during the team's fitness testing, each completing 31. Miller added two more to his tally this year—and Chara came in first with 35. As for the off-ice leadership Chara provides, that doesn't have an expiration date. For an athlete who prioritizes his physical training, another candle on the birthday cake doesn't spell doom—at least not this season. Hopefully he'll have another reason to celebrate come spring.

MATT MARTINELLI:

Yes. He's 37. Is anyone that age as physically fit as they were in their 20s? Go ask Tom Brady. Time catches up with everyone, and while Chara's a surefire Hall of Famer, he's not superhuman. He's coming back from a season in which his point total and total time on ice per game were the lowest for a full season in a decade. But don't mistake decline for disaster. Big Z is still a force, and the Bruins can still win the Stanley Cup with him as their best defenseman. He's simply going to need to have his regular-season minutes cut back to ensure he's in prime shape for the playoffs. Considering that most NHL defensemen peak in their late 20s, the Bruins are pretty fortunate that Chara's gone this long without slipping too much.

WHO IS MORE LIKELY TO REPEAT: TUUKKA RASK AS VEZINA WINNER OR PATRICE BERGERON AS SELKE WINNER?

SARAH HAGMAN:

When it comes to defensive-minded forwards, few in the league are better than Patrice Bergeron. He took home the Selke in 2012, finished second in 2013 and claimed it again last season, with 112 of the 137 Professional Hockey Writers' Association members selecting him as their top choice. The runner-up, Los Angeles' Anze Kopitar, received 20 first-place votes, putting him at a distant second. Last year Bergeron had the numbers to back up the win, and there's no reason one of the league's most dependable two-way players won't be a top contender again this season. He's consistently a league-leading faceoff winner, and in 2013 he finished with the most faceoff wins of any NHL player in the past seven years. He's also the guy you want out on a penalty-kill unit, and his career-high 38-plus rating last season speaks for itself. Get ready for another award-worthy performance.

MATT MARTINELLI:

It's not simply that Tuukka Rask was superb last season, posting stats that stood among the league's best in almost every important category. It's that if you look back at his career, those gaudy numbers are not outliers. Aside from his nightmarish 2011 season, Tuukka Time has been oh-so-good for the Bruins during the past five years—and there's no evidence that will change anytime soon. There's a reason that, despite having a collection of promising young goaltending prospects, the Bruins gave Rask an eight-year $56 million deal before last season. The 27-year-old is the most consistent goalie in the NHL. His rivals—Carey Price, Henrik Lundqvist, Jonathan Quick—all might occasionally have years that equal Rask's 2014 performance, but none of those guys has performed as consistently. That makes him the odds-on favorite to bring home the Vezina again. Here's hoping they spell his name correctly the second time.

DO THE BRUINS HAVE ENOUGH OFFENSIVE FIREPOWER TO MAKE IT PAST THE SECOND ROUND?

SARAH HAGMAN:

The B's are first and foremost a defensive team, but that doesn't mean that they can't find the back of the net. With last postseason's early exit still fresh—and with a statistically improbable number of pucks hitting the post—it's easy to forget that Boston finished third in the league in goals scored. Another reminder: While Krejci's postseason performance was disappointing, he led the team in the 2013 playoffs with nine goals and 17 assists. Those are the types of numbers that fans can once again expect. Then there's Eriksson, who—hampered by two concussions—tallied only half the numbers he had during 2012 in Dallas. Barring injuries, that should change this season. The other piece of the puzzle is maintaining the improved power play. If that happens, the Bruins could once again be an offensive force, with no limit to their postseason success. The key here: Keeping Chara a forward on the power-play unit.

MATT MARTINELLI:

The Bruins have the odd-year streak in their favor, having made the Stanley Cup Finals in 2011 and 2013. So, the upcoming 2014-15 season has to yield another run to the Finals, right? That's as good a way as any to predict the wacky NHL playoffs. But the Bruins won't be getting there because of offensive firepower. Their three best players are a goalie, a defenseman and a defensive-minded forward. This team is built on defense. The B's biggest offensive threat was Iginla, and he's no longer on the team. How did the Bruins do in 2013, their last season without Iginla? They were 13th in the league in goals scored. They will likely be among the best teams in the league again this season, but it won't be because they're an offensive juggernaut.

Kickin' It

Foot Fest.

IF YOU HAVE A SIZABLE eollection of well-worn Chucks in your closet, you are not a sneakerhead. You're a guy (or gal) who likes to keep it comfortable and ehill vis-à-vis your footwear. If, however, you own an unworn pair of Air Jordan 13 "Altitudes" that you keep in an airtight glass ease, guess what? Certified sneakerhead. That latter contingent of shoe-savvy fanatics would do well to drop by Sneaker Jam when it hits town. The largest sneaker event in the world, the expo features rare sneakers and memorabilia, a floor dedicated to sneaker trading, a host of manufacturers and designers on hand, urban art and threads, skateboard demos, panel discussions, DJs and more. Plus, a stage co-sponsored by Laced Boston and Triple 7 Ent. boasts live performances by local hip-hop acts N.B.S., Edo G and Dutch ReBelle. In short, it's going to be dope! Follow your well-shod feet to the Seaport World Trade Center on Oct. 18 and 19. / Alexandra Cavallo

UNCHAINED MELODIES

Elton John and Tim Rice's AIDA is a love story for the ages. Based on Verdi's opera, the Tony-winning musical follows the forbidden romance between Aida, an enslaved Nubian princess, and Ramades, one of the Egyptian soldiers enlisted to keep her in chains. It takes the star-crossed lovers a few millennia, but they eventually find their happy ending—and the story onstage isn't the only uplifting one at play. The pop-rock musical is the first of three planned by Fiddlehead Theatre Company for its second season in residence at the Strand Theatre, which added a $1.5 million sound and lighting system this year to draw high-caliber performances to the historic Dorchester venue. Plus, a portion of proceeds from AIDA tickets will support the work of the AIDS Action Committee; grab yours and travel through time Oct. 17-26 at the Strand. / Alexandra Cavallo PHOTO: MATTHEW MCKEE

HAIR OF THE DOG

Alas, you can't blame your roommate's hellish mood on the full moon; meta-analyses suggest there's no lunar effect on human behavior. Werewolf behavior—that's a different story. Take it from Jack and David, whose sightseeing trip through the English moors is derailed by a hairy beast with a taste for blood in An American Werewolf in London. Winner of the inaugural Academy Award for best makeup, the 1981 cult classic should make for a perfect pre-Halloween scare-sesh, though it might make you rethink that backpacking trip. Sharpen your pitchforks in time to catch a 35mm screening at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on Oct. 27. / Katie Smith

Reviews by Brett Michel

The Boxtrolls ★★★ Based on Alan Snow's children's novel Here Be Monsters!, this latest hand-crafted marvel from the stop-motion animators at Laika studios is a darkly twisted look at the goings-on of the incredibly expressive inhabitants of Cheesebridge and their quirky underground counterparts: cave-dwelling trash collectors known as Boxtrolls. Mischievous creatures, they've raised an orphaned human boy named Eggs (voiced by Game of Thrones' Isaac Hempstead-Wright), a pawn in a convoluted plot hatched by the town's Mr. Creosote-like exterminator, Archibald Snatcher (Academy Award winner Ben Kingsley), to rid the land of these misunderstood, gibberish-spewing "monsters." How exactly Eggs has developed his Queen's English vocabulary is a mystery best not contemplated. Be sure to stay during the end credits for a behind-the-curtain look at some of the film's production art, plus a wonderfully self-referential sequence contemplating the existential link between the characters and their creators; if the rest of the movie had been half as clever, this might have stood as a worthy successor to Laika's ParaNorman and Coraline. As is, directors Anthony Stacchi and Graham Annable have created something that's merely better than most live-action productions. What nerve! (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Boyhood ★★★1/2 With his landmark trilogy—1995's Before Sunrise, 2004's Before Sunset and last year's Before Midnight—writer/director Richard Linklater has spent 18 years tracking the lives of two lovers (Julie Delpy and Ethan Hawke), checking in with them at nine-year intervals. With his latest extended-storytelling experiment, an epic chronicle of childhood's mundane moments filmed over 12 years, Linklater finds the poetry in growing up. When we meet Mason Evans Jr. (played by newcomer Ellar Coltrane from ages 6 to 18), he's a cute little moppet going about everyday kid stuff. But Linklater's not interested in an idyllic Norman Rockwell portrait. Mason's part of a fractured family, held together by his mom (Patricia Arquette, never better). Humorous signifiers act as time capsules, buried throughout the film to clue us into the year of the action. Some of these signposts are quite literal: By the end of W's second term, Mason Sr. (Hawke) has his son planting Obama signs on neighborhood lawns—while uprooting McCain posters. It's just one of life's little moments that makes this 2 hour and 46 minute film move so effortlessly fast. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Disappearance of Eleanor Rigby: Them ★★1/2 There's a lot to like in this film from newcomer Ned Benson, a portrait of a marriage fractured by a tragedy that's only gradually revealed, never wholly coming into focus. Jessica Chastain is Eleanor Rigby, and when first we see her and her husband, Conor Ludlow (James McAvoy), they're skipping out on a dinner bill, fleeing into the streets of Manhattan—rather unforgivable, once we find out that Conor owns his own restaurant. Still, this doesn't explain why Eleanor attempts to take her own life in the next scene. But then, there are many questions about this pair that remain unanswered, which can probably be explained by the fact that Benson's movie used to live as two separate pictures, subtitled Him and Her. The reconfigured Them is a paired-down compromise that frustrates; the companion films premiered in Toronto a year ago to much acclaim, but this edit gives the impression that too much was left on the cutting room floor. And yet, a handful of scenes etch in the memory, like a tender monologue delivered by Eleanor's father (William Hurt). Alas, more attention should have been focused on us. (In the suburbs.)

The Drop ★★★ This latest crime drama from Michael R. Roskam, the Belgian director of 2012 Best Foreign Language Film nominee Bullhead, opens with an image of the underside of the Brooklyn Bridge reflected in a dirty puddle. This shot encapsulates a lot of the messy goings-on in the screenplay from local author Dennis Lehane, based on his short story "Animal Rescue." The small world of quiet bartender Bob Saginowski (Tom Hardy), who works for his cousin Marv (James Gandolfini), is about to be turned upside-down. Their small pub, a front for a scheme of money drops that funnel cash to the Chechen mobsters who control the bar, is robbed by a couple of clueless thugs, setting in motion events that will expose neighborhood secrets going back a decade. Lehane's plot is secondary, but this is a terrific character study featuring fine work from Swedish actress Noomi Rapace, imposing Belgian Matthias Schoenaerts (star of Bullhead), the late Gandolfini and especially Hardy, a Brit who brings a touch of Terry Malloy and Marty Piletti to his lovesick loner, a man who shares many traits with his pit bull, a scruffy pup he's pulled from the garbage. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Equalizer ★★★ Your parents may have been fans of The Equalizer, the 1985-89 CBS series starring British actor Edward Woodward as a 60-something retired agent-turned-private detective, an avenging angel helping to equalize the odds against the downtrodden. But you might think twice about taking them to this excessively violent film that serves as the TV show's prequel, transplanting the action from the mean streets of New York to the meaner streets of Boston. Robert McCall, the stuffy suit- and overcoat-wearing Brit, has been reimagined as, well, Denzel Washington, an everyman-with-a-past who manages a Home Depot-like warehouse store that you just know will serve as the perfect location for an extended, bloody shootout. When McCall meets Teri (Chloë Grace Moretz), an underage prostitute controlled by Russian gangsters (led by Marton Csokas in a terrifically scene-chewing turn), he can idle no longer. Slickly helmed by Antoine Fuqua (who directed Washington in his Oscar-winning role in 2001's Training Day), this completely ridiculous entertainment even grants its star Terminator-like eagle vision. Your folks can keep their small-screen Equalizer; this big-screen update is a brutal blast. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Gone Girl ★★1/2 Directed by David Fincher at his most coldly clinical, this wildly anticipated adaptation of the global bestseller by Gillian Flynn is faithful to a fault, lacking the lurid humor that would enliven such a potboiler. A handsome actor the media loves to hate, Ben Affleck is well cast as Nick Dunne, a man who's suspected of foul play when his seemingly perfect wife, Amy (Rosamund Pike), goes missing on the morning of their fifth wedding anniversary. Flynn adapted her own book for the screenplay, and while her material remains playful and increasingly ridiculous, it grows more and more tedious once the story opens up its secrets in the second hour and the fun drains out of the proceedings. This is the type of did-he-or-didn't-he movie that Michael Douglas used to star in as a matter of course—and Fincher even had success making one of these vehicles with Douglas when he directed 1997's The Game—but like Flynn's book, this film falters in its second half. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Assembly Row, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Kill the Messenger ★★1/2 Like The Parallax View by way of All the President's Men, Michael Cuesta's look at the troubled life of Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist Gary Webb doesn't hit the heights of either of those Alan J. Pakula classics, although the fact-based script by investigative journalist Peter Landesman does raise a lot of troubling questions—as did Webb, before he was discredited and driven to suicide. Based on Webb's book Dark Alliance and Nick Schou's book Kill the Messenger, the film features two-time Oscar nominee Jeremy Renner in another fiery performance as Webb, who exposed the CIA's role in arming Contra rebels in Nicaragua and its troubling complicity in allowing crack cocaine into California communities, before becoming the target of a vicious smear campaign for his troubles. Despite warnings from drug kingpins and CIA operatives alike, Webb kept digging as his professional and personal life unraveled. Rosemarie DeWitt is excellent as Webb's long-suffering wife (get this woman a lead role, stat!), but the domestic scenes ultimately detract from the larger story being told, that of a man destroyed for seeking the truth. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Love Is Strange ★★★1/2 In this compassionate portrait of the hardships faced by a couple finally married after nearly four decades together, John Lithgow and Alfred Molina bring real tenderness to their roles as Ben and George, a septuagenarian painter and a slightly younger music teacher at a Manhattan Catholic school. Rapidly, the two discover the meaning of "for better or worse." George is fired as a result of their union, forcing the two to sell the apartment they've shared for almost 20 years. Worse, they must live apart until they can find an affordable home. George moves in with a couple of NYPD officers (Manny Perez and Cheyenne Jackson) who live in their tenement, while Ben is taken in by his nephew (Darren Burrows) and his wife (Marisa Tomei), sharing a bunk bed with their territorial teenage son (Charlie Tahan). Separation takes its toll on the couple, and Lithgow is particularly fine as he quietly communicates his creeping realization that he's become a burden. Never dipping wholly into melodrama, this heartbreaker from director Ira Sachs casts its spell gradually, like the delicate Chopin that serves as the soundtrack. Lovely. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Men, Women & Children ★ From the floating graphics popping up above characters' heads to Emma Thompson's narration, this could be a sequel to 2006's Stranger Than Fiction, but one of those films was enough, thank you very much. Jason Reitman's alarmist picture about the evils of the Internet and the dangers of disconnection might stand as the worst picture of the year if Reitman hadn't already earned that distinction when he delivered Labor Day to audiences this past winter. This overreaching, pompous movie literally reaches for the stars, opening on a shot of the Voyager space probe as it leaves our solar system before coming down to earth as Adam Sandler's neck-bearded everyman, Don Truby, settles in front of his 15-year-old son's computer to masturbate. The comedian's character is part of a large ensemble of interconnected parents and teenagers who attempt to navigate issues such as infidelity, fame hunting, anorexia and video game culture. "In all our cosmos," intones Thompson, a la Carl Sagan, "there is no hint that anyone will come and save us from ourselves." Or from this movie. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Pride ★★★ If theater director Matthew Warchus' film only relied on the laughs mined from buttoned-up British thespian Imelda Staunton asking hilariously candid questions about homosexuality, it'd be worth a recommendation. But actor and first-time writer Stephen Beresford's shamelessly manipulative script also includes enough kitchen-sink realism to earn its tears. An earnest crowd-pleaser that avoids veering completely into sentimentality, the film relates the true events surrounding the 1984 formation of a London-based group of gay and lesbian activists who raised money to support the striking National Union of mineworkers and their families in the Welsh countryside. It features a wonderful cast, including Bill Nighy as Staunton's husband, Paddy Considine as the union rep who welcomes the group to a town that initially doesn't know what to make of their new friends, and Dominic West as one of the first men in the U.K. to be diagnosed with HIV. Margaret Thatcher's England was a tough place for many, but these two groups of unlikely bedfellows discovered that standing together made for the strongest union of all. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Skeleton Twins ★★★ Recognizing that there's often an air of sadness to former Saturday Night Live player Kristen Wiig's performances, director Craig Johnson and his co-writer, Mark Heyman, fashioned this comic drama involving chronic depression around the actress's hilariously melancholy talents. When we first see Wiig's Maggie, she's about to swallow a fistful of pills, but she's stopped by a phone call informing her that her fraternal twin, Milo (Wiig's longtime SNL cast mate Bill Hader)—a self-described "tragic gay cliche"—has just attempted to end his life. It would be easy to dismiss Hader's performance as a feature-length version of his "Stefon" character, but there's a depth to Milo that cuts deeper than the slits he's carved into his wrists. Nevertheless, some of Stefon's gleefully warped sensibility surfaces in Milo's suicide note, which reads, "To whom it may concern: see ya later," punctuated with a smiley face. And really, that about sums up the film's formula; it goes into some dark corners, but it always emerges in a happier place. As much as Milo and Maggie try to sabotage everything good and stable, it's their laughter that guides them—and us—through. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

This Is Where I Leave You ★★ Wasting nearly everyone involved, Shawn Levy brings his middle-of-the-road style to a movie that demanded so much more. Jonathan Tropper adapted the screenplay from his well-regarded novel, and the ensemble cast is certainly an asset (Jason Bateman, Tina Fey, Adam Driver and Corey Stoll play the children of Jane Fonda's matriarch). But Levy plays everything too broad, never finding a dramatic tone to ground all the comic beats; that's not terribly surprising, as he's best known for the Night at the Museum movies. Bateman is terrific as protagonist Judd Altman—as is Driver as family antagonist Phillip—but Fey's dramatic chops still have a way to go. Sure, she sheds quite a few tears, but her anguish wouldn't be any more believable if she were playing a crocodile. The siblings have gathered to fulfill their father's dying wish and sit shiva. He was an atheist, mind you. OK, so the plot exists simply to get these disparate people together. The one thing they share? Their distaste for their mother's new boobs. And for this alone, Fonda deserves to win a good sport award. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Tracks ★★★1/2 "It seems to me the universe gave us three gifts to make life bearable—hope, jokes and dogs," muses Robyn Davidson (Alice in Wonderland's talented Mia Wasikowska) in John Curran's handsome true-life travelogue. "But the greatest of these gifts," she concludes, "was dogs." Indeed, the spare script—adapted from Davidson's 1980 memoir and her popular 1978 cover story for National Geographic—finds the willowy Australian arriving in dusty Alice Springs with nothing but her beloved black Labrador, Diggity. Tired of both city life and her country's class system, she's planning a 2,000-mile trek across the Outback, accompanied by her dog and a quartet of camels who increasingly become more like 4,000-pound versions of her canine companion. "I think you have a problem with people," observes Rick Smolan (Adam Driver of HBO's Girls), a talkative American photographing her journey for National Geographic as a condition of the magazine's sponsorship, even if her voyage was spawned by a desire to be alone. The widescreen cinematography, captured on film and inspired by Smolan's photographs, demands to be seen on the big screen; catch this one in the theater if you can. (At Coolidge Corner, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Trip to Italy ★★★ A few years back, prolific filmmaker Michael Winterbottom unleashed a culinary, comic treat with The Trip, a largely improvised travelogue featuring comedians Steve Coogan and Rob Brydon (as a pair of friends named, conveniently, Steve Coogan and Rob Brydon) touring around northern England, sampling the region's restaurants on a magazine assignment. It wasn't really about much more than that, but listening to this duo riff off each other as semi-fictionalized versions of themselves sure was funny. They haven't lost any of their comic edge as they return for seconds, traveling from Piedmont to the Amalfi Coast to Capri in a convertible Mini Cooper, retracing the steps of the Romantic poets. It's doubtful that Byron and Shelley engaged in dueling impersonations of 19th-century actors, but hearing the Alan Partridge star (Coogan) and the talented Welsh mimic (Brydon) return to the vocal stylings of Michael Caine, as well as volley back-and-forth with the voices of various James Bonds, Batman, his nemesis Bane and the different decibels of Al Pacino is side-splitting. (At West Newton.)

A Walk Among the Tombstones ★★★ Although capable, former NYPD cop turned unlicensed investigator Matt Scudder (Liam Neeson) would rather defuse a situation than dish out the hurt. Hell, sometimes he'll even take a good beating himself—but with that nose, who'd notice? This isn't the first time the recovering alcoholic has gone from the pages of Lawrence Block's best-selling mystery novels to the big screen (Jeff Bridges played him in 1986's poorly received 8 Million Ways to Die). But here writer/director Scott Frank is a pro who knows how to use his star—Neeson makes for quite the drunken Dirty Harry—and block his action, a forgotten art in our quick cut/shaky camera era. Scudder doesn't have a particular problem with corruption ("I couldn't have fed my family without it"), and he's a bit of a Luddite; setting this film in the halcyon days of 1999 allows him to both look up newspaper articles on microfiche while still fretting about Y2K—with the specter of 9/11 looming on the horizon. When a drug trafficker hires Scudder to find out who kidnapped and murdered his wife, one of the film's uglier characters observes, "People are afraid of all the wrong things." Some things never change. (At Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

TACKLING THE ELEMENTS

If the NFL has its way, this year's Super Bowl halftime performers will have to pay to play. Luckily for Kina Grannis, the California songstress didn't have to shell out a penny to secure her musical spot back in 2008. The folk singer, who'd already amassed a dedicated YouTube following, scored a coveted gig in a Doritos commercial after winning a rising musician contest. Since then she's nabbed a contract with Interscope but hasn't abandoned her Internet fans, steadily uploading original songs and covers while turning out two studio albums. Hear soulful sounds from her latest, Elements, when she plays the Paradise Rock Club on Oct. 27. | Elizabeth Isenberg

DRAWING ATTENTION

Renaissance sculptors didn't only wield hammers and chisels. Get a peek into their process at Donatello, Michelangelo, Cellini: Sculptors' Drawings from Renaissance Italy, featuring 45 drawings along with select sculptures by the titular titans and their contemporaries (like the delightfully named Leone Leoni, whose nearly 500-year-old sketches are shown here). Exploring the varied ways such artists used drawing—and interrogating the idea that the era's sculptors generally weren't skilled draftsmen—the exhibit opens on Oct. 23 with a talk from curator Oliver Tostmann, who'll give insight into an intriguing self-portrait of Baccio Bandinelli in which the Florentine artist points not to one of the massive statues that made his name, but to one of his preparatory works on paper. Get drawn in at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum through Jan. 19. / Jacqueline Houton

FIRE IN ICE

Poet Sandra Lim was born in Korea and raised in California, but her new book The Wilderness is firmly rooted in New England, a place she now calls home. The UMass Lowell professor and Cambridge resident's latest collection of poems explores the fatalism of Puritanism and a force that can give the hardiest among us Sylvia Plath-like dispositions: the harsh New England winter. A winner of the Barnard Women Poets Prize, the book prompted one fellow poet to decree, "No one does the darkness quite as well as Sandra Lim." Feel the chill on Oct. 21 when she visits Trident Booksellers & Cafe. / Grace Rasmus

The IMPROPER On the Town!

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. AND BARNEYS SELLS BASEBALL CAPS!

It's not like they need to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear, but they still go whole hog at Fenway to the Runway, a fashion show thrown by the Red Sox wives to benefit the Red Sox Foundation (of which The Improper was a proud sponsor).

Hosted by Saks Fifth Avenue, the afternoon drew a high-powered, predominantly female crowd—although several players showed up to watch their uniformly gorgeous other halves show off designer ensembles, and a few brought their adorable offspring as well.

The afternoon's bevy of beauties included Queen of Red Sox Nation Linda Pizzuti Henry, unrepentant fashion plate Ashley Bernon, Brazilian swimsuit designer Sinesia Karol, the comme il faut Corinne Grousbeck, Chestnut Hill chatelaine Nancy Adams, the doe-eyed Jessica Naddaff Merle, brunette bombshell Amy Belkin, the flawless Nina Fialkow, arts booster Sue Dahling Sullivan, unofficial Akris model Debbie First, the congenitally delightful Patty Ribakoff, fashion designer Michael De Paulo, sassy cupcake maker Courtney Forrester, the always effervescent Rachael Goldfarb, babe-alicious Weston mom Kristie Zaccagnino, and so on and so forth.

The champagne reception gave way to white wine at lunch, which fueled the live auction and an afternoon of guilt-free shopping (10 percent of the proceeds went to charity). As one woman put it: "As far as my husband's concerned, if it involves the Red Sox, it doesn't matter how much I spend."

BEATS CALLING STANLEY STEEMER

There's nothing quite like the 5 Under 40 party to make you feel old and unaccomplished. Hosted by New England Home magazine, the evening celebrated the hottest young'uns in the design world with a cocktail party at Landry & Arcari and raised money for Barakat, a Cambridge nonprofit that fosters literacy and education in Central and South Asia.

While a live auction/stand-up comedy act unfolded inside the high-end rug dealer's showroom, courtesy of TV personalities Billy Costa and Jenny Johnson, excess guests spilled out into the glass-enclosed Galleria at 333 Stuart St. to booze and schmooze. Among the usual good-looking, well-dressed suspects: Davio's handsome head honcho Steve DiFillippo, quirky decor savant Eric Portnoy, interior design avatar Eric Roseff, his colleagues, the criminally blue-eyed Ken Dietz and the swanlike Suzanne Logan, fabric guru Eliot Wright, and one woman who grabbed a bottle of champagne from behind the bar so that she could turn her full attention on socializing.

Meanwhile, inside the showroom, the bidding for some of the rugs went into the stratosphere, and—predictably for a design crowd—there was no shortage of catty comments, as from the designer who muttered, "The most I can say for that rug is that it'll hide lots of stains."

TONIGHT WE'RE GONNA PARTY LIKE IT'S 1924

Anyone who reaches the age of 90 is bound to have some interesting stories to tell, but few have as many and as interesting as multi-hyphenate Marvin Gilmore. The nonagenarian musician, war hero, philanthropist, legionnaire d'honneur, impresario and real estate tycoon celebrated his birthday in characteristically high style with a party at the Hyatt Regency Boston that raised money for the Community Development Corporation.

The ballroom was decorated in luxe art nouveau—probably not terribly different from the way the Cotton Club looked when it opened, the year before Gilmore was born. The list of dignitaries there to toast him was legion, and the entertainment included performances by Grammy winner Gregory Porter and Gilmore's sons, David and Marque. Present and accounted for: former governor Mike Dukakis, former mayor Tom Menino, son-of-a-speaker-man Tom O'Neill, New England Conservatory head honcho Tony Woodcock, Wheelock president Jackie Jenkins-Scott, UMass Boston chancellor J. Keith Motley, emcee Joyce Kulhawik, Gilmore's biographer, Paul Katzeff, Lafayette Society head Alan Hoffman, force of nature Smoki Bacon and her affable other half, Dick Concannon, Nantucket playboy George Albrecht, legendary jazz promoter Fred Taylor, the incomparable Darryl Settles, the Mother Theresa of Boston Harbor, Vivien Li, and so on and so forth.

The carving stations kept everyone well-fed, the bartenders kept everyone well-lubricated, and for one evening, everyone took time to toast one of the greatest members of the Greatest Generation. Of course, with age comes wisdom; hence the guest who said, "In the old days, if we wanted to drink for free, we'd just dye our dog green and go to South Boston." ◆

CRAZY FOR LOVE

IT'S EASY TO FORGET THAT TODAY'S tradition is often yesterday's newfangled trend. Before Queen Victoria walked down the aisle in white in 1840, wedding gowns featured all sorts of bright colors, often finding second lives as party dresses. So why play by the rules? For our Wedding issue's fashion spread, Lydia Santangelo set out to marry something old—the beautiful halls of the Boston Public Library—with bridal looks offering something new, be it fun separates, high hemlines or unexpected details. Meanwhile, Nicole Popma taps some local wedding pros for reception ideas, and Carley Thornell takes a closer look at Boston wedding bands, letting bluegrass pickers, big-band swingers and other interesting acts riff on memorable gigs, from a Dropkick's nuptials to a mass wedding at a brewery. Elsewhere, Alix Childs rounds up some goodies for the groom, and Alexandra Cavallo checks in with a new startup that hopes to make buying bridesmaids' dresses a breeze. Of course, you don't need a bridal party or fancy flatware for a wonderful big day. All you really need is someone you love—and, OK, $60 in cash—so Sarah Hagman and Meghan Kavanaugh chat with couples who chose to make it official at City Hall, whose stories prove that the traditions that matter most are the ones we make together.

GETTING HITCHED AT CITY HALL »»

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD

OFFICIAL OFFICIANT

Bostonians may meet with City Clerk Maureen Feeney about a business certificate or marijuana citation, but she's also the woman you'll see should you walk down the aisle in City Hall's Room 601.

What do couples often not know about getting married in City Hall? Well, it's certainly something I never thought about before I was here. People [often] think it's out at the counter where we do our daily business, and they're a little squeamish about that. [But] they either go to the assistant clerk or clerk's office.

Are you ever nervous being part of something that means so much to people? It's really a blessing. Because we have so many functions here and do so much other work, it's just a special moment. I try to be in the moment for the couple. I think it's important to do that, as best you can.

What about the couples? Are they nervous? For the most part, people are excited and anxious. They approach it with a little trepidation because they don't know what's coming, so I try to explain what the ceremony will consist of so that they'll be more comfortable. And no one has to memorize anything. They always think they have to memorize something.

Do any particularly memorable ceremonies come to mind? It still surprises me when I see this big guy standing there, looking very serious—and then we get up and start the ceremony, and suddenly you see the tears. It's special to share in that personal moment.

Any advice for newlyweds? I always tell them to remember they need a date night, even if it just means going out for a cup of coffee—staying in for a cup of coffee! Life gets busy and hectic. I'm just celebrating my 40th anniversary, so I certainly believe in marriage.

All You Need Is Love

The wedding industry may be a $40 billion business, but many couples choose to forgo a lavish affair and the inevitable meltdown over aisle runners in favor of a more intimate ceremony. This year, Boston City Hall has already welcomed more than 1,700 couples—including these four, who shared how and why they made it official. / Sarah Hagman and Meghan Kavanaugh

LAURA AND NATHAN SCOTT

This pair of medical students met while interviewing at Columbia, but both ended up at Harvard. School's not the only thing keeping them busy. "We have a 1-year old daughter and pretty large families, [so] getting 'just us' time pretty much never happens," Laura says. The two celebrated with lunch in the North End after leaving City Hall. A few weeks later, they held a 70-guest ceremony on the Sinclair's patio with a friend "officiating."

JULIANNA AND STEVEN HANSCOM

"We wanted to be married in Boston—with all that the city has to offer with its location, history and ambiance—without the stress of going through all the planning of a big wedding," Julianna says, making City Hall the "perfect choice" for their April nuptials. The couple followed up "I do's" with an evening at the Omni Parker House, dining at the table where JFK proposed to Jackie.

SCOTT FRIEDMAN AND JULIA MICKENBERG

These high school sweethearts had just bought a house when they tied the knot in July, so they wanted a simple ceremony with just parents and Julia's grandmother in attendance. The group enjoyed lunch with Champagne that afternoon before sending the newlyweds off to their honeymoon at an Ogunquit bed and breakfast. Celebrations continued the next weekend. "We invited all our local friends to a bar," Julia recalls.

JOHN AND ERICK MARTHA-REYNOLDS

This pair met serendipitously—by crossing paths in the city twice in one night. In June, they got hitched with a small ceremony. "We wanted something intimate for our immediate family," John explains. Then, earlier this month, the couple exchanged rings and held a lasso ceremony, a tradition from Erick's native Mexico. The reception took place at the East Boston arts nonprofit ZUMIX, a place music teacher John calls "personal and historic."

TODD MAUL MAY FINALLY HAVE MET HIS match. The former bar manager of Clio, who's as apt to use a centrifuge and a rotary evaporator as a muddler and a jigger, has teamed with Harvard professor and inventor David Edwards as part of Le Laboratoire Cambridge's Cafe ArtScience. That means whenever Maul has a science question—about fractional distillation or chemical reactions—he now asks the "ingenious gentleman" Edwards. And then he shuts up and listens.

"With all the talent we have involved in this project, it's really like a think tank for food," Maul says. "If someone has an idea, they just say it. And a better idea comes out of many people thinking about it."

All that talent includes Cafe ArtScience partners Maul, executive chef Patrick Campbell (No. 9 Park), general manager Tom Mastricola (Commonwealth) and Edwards, who founded Le Lab in Paris and is opening the first U.S. location in Cambridge. Le Lab will feature art and design exhibits, public programs and experiments, futuristic food products and the highly anticipated Cafe ArtScience, slated to open Oct. 31. And while the restaurant has a clean, almost lab-like aesthetic, the vibe is anything but sterile. The center of the space is home to a honeycomb-shaped auditorium, which will host experiments, demonstrations and private dining. The dining room offers plush seating for 120, with another 24 seats at the bar, where Maul aims to live up to the latter part of the restaurant's name.

Case in point: The orange and cherry flag for a Tom Collins will not simply be a cherry and orange slice. Maul will use the juice from a Luxardo cherry jar, cut it with lime juice that's been through the centrifuge, then mix it with citrus rice and put that inside an edible orange-flavored WikiPearl envelope (an Edwards invention). And while Maul's menu will have 20 drinks to start, he hopes that guests only glance at it. "I want people to ask me what I'm working on," he says. "Once I've put it on a cocktail list, I've already moved past it. Cocktail menus are like greatest-hits albums."

In the kitchen, Campbell is taking a more traditional approach, preferring to master crudos and grilled pork belly before branching out and incorporating Edwards' inventions, such as aroma telephones and Flavor Clouds. Most portions will be sized somewhere between a tasting and an appetizer. "We're encouraging our guests to order three or four dishes per person, depending on their appetite. We're trying to get people to try more things than they've tried before," Campbell says. "My goal is to be able to offer a very special and exciting experience to guests in the dining room, but the menu is going to be based on substantial, real food."

MANY HAPPY RETURNS

SINCE TONY AMBROSE CLOSED BOTH Ambrosia on Huntington and Blackfin Chophouse eight years ago, he's kept a lower profile on the local restaurant scene, quietly running his catering business and making an occasional celebrity chef appearance. For those of you unfamiliar with Ambrose—a boldface culinary figure in the '90s—he worked with Jasper White at Jasper's, became the first American chef de cuisine at Le Meridien (now the Langham) and was executive chef at Seasons at the Bostonian Hotel. In 1993, he opened Ambrosia to much fanfare, serving dishes that drew from his French and Italian background, combined with Asian influences.

If you have fond memories of his lobster sashimi martini or pig chop, it's time to trek to bucolic Bolton, where Ambrose is now acting culinary director at The International. More specifically, he's cooking at the golf resort's restaurant, The Fireplace Room, while reveling in the rural surroundings, foraging for mushrooms on the golf course and working with local purveyors such as the turkey farm across the street. On the dinner menu, the pig chop is back, this time grilled and baked with toasted citron jelly, seared bok choy and fennel. Also featured is a charred lamb shank with toasted fig, barley and celeriac. But "the shining star right now is the swordfish chop," Ambrose says. "We roast the oversize chop—there are just two per swordfish—with fresh galanga and garlic." It's definitely "Ambrosia-style cuisine," he adds.

Ambrose says there are a lot of requests from veteran Ambrosia diners for favorite items such as Peruvian spring rolls, lobster Breton crepes with smoky shiitake vinaigrette, and squid ink risotto with caviar. "It's the biggest compliment," he says, while advising those diners to watch for specials.

SALVATORE'S UNPLUGGED

CAN YOU GET THROUGH A RESTAURANT MEAL without texting, checking your email or taking a photo of your food? How about free food as an incentive? All five locations of Salvatore's are currently offering "Off the Grid Mondays." You and your entourage turn in your devices before you're seated, and when you buy one entree, you get one free. (Solo diners get 50 percent off the bill.) So go ahead: Talk to each other for a change.

Purveyors: Pure and Simple

You could say that the local boutique chocolate options have gotten a little sweeter lately, but that wouldn't accurately describe the flavor of Pure 7 Chocolate. Having opened their business in a converted barn in Carlisle last year, friends Julie MacQueen and Carrie Raho churn out 2-ounce bars that are really dark—85 to 100 percent cacao—and sweetened with raw honey instead of sugar. And while the flavors are sophisticated (don't miss Orange Goldenberry, which is citrus-scented and punctuated with the tart, chewy dried fruit), the pair says the products have passed muster with their toughest critics: their kids. / Elizabeth Bomze

7 IN HEAVEN: There's nothing sinful about these sophisticated chocolate treats.

THANKS AND CRANKS

TO THE KIND, HONEST WOMAN WHO FOUND MY PREPAID PARKING LOT VOUCHERS AND RETURNED THEM TO MOUNT AUBURN HOSPITAL: Thank you, thank you, thank you. Your act of kindness has given me much joy in the telling of this story. I will pay your kindness forward. People are good.

— Indebted driver

ENTITLED SNIT ON THE RED LINE: I'm going to take a wild guess that you are the same woman who was massively pregnant this summer, who loudly demanded a seat before your foot was in the car. Now that you've produced your spawn, you loudly announce, "You people need to make room," and "My kid will pay your Social Security." It was rush hour and you could have waited for another train, but no, you had to be on that train. Check the attitude and move to the 'burbs.

— Miffed about manners

TO A KIND COMMUTER: I just wanted to say thank you to the nice woman who offered her seat to me—the pregnant lady—on the inbound Green Line train last Thursday on my commute home. I was so touched. I didn't even take you up on the offer, but appreciated it nonetheless. Your act of kindness reassured me that manners have not gone out the window for everyone.

— Grateful on the Green Line

DEAREST NEIGHBORS: You've accused me of poisoning your cat and of trying to burn our building down with a decorative tiki torch. You've left your dirty dishes on our shared porch, causing a fruit fly situation, and you've called the police to say my apartment had been burglarized just to have the door knocked down to find nothing wrong. But now you've really crossed the line, questioning the hygiene of my apartment by claiming to have a cockroach infestation of your own due to my dirty apartment. Well, the landlord and I had a great laugh today when he saw my always-pristine apartment with no signs of the cockroaches you must be harvesting next door. Next time, clean up your own mess before you come knocking on my door—you know, glass houses and all. I will always win!

VOW TO WOW

Choosing dresses for the bridal party can involve as much drama as a Say Yes to the Dress marathon. But don't go bridezilla just yet: Style My Bridal is here to help. Recently launched by three local sisters—Amanda, Brittany and Alyssa Loring—the startup offers a personalized service that's essentially like having a team of stylists trick out your bridal party. We tapped the trio for advice on making sure everyone looks and feels their best, without any cities being razed in the process. / Alexandra Cavallo

Advice for choosing a dress that everyone will feel comfortable in? Brittany: It's important to be understanding of some body image issues that may exist. I solved this problem for my wedding by allowing the bridesmaids to choose one of five options. Amanda: The empire waist and ruching are great secrets to shift focus away from a problem area. Alyssa: We also love the look of a simpler dress with interesting jewelry, or a red lip that adds a pop to a bridesmaid's face.

What are some trends you're excited about right now? Amanda: Naked cakes. They are so simple, yet so chic! Another favorite fashion trend of mine ... is a dress that has a detachable skirt to transform into a reception dress. Ballet-inspired looks for bridesmaids are a huge trend we're going to see for spring.

A trend you're glad to see die? Amanda: Bridesmaids pulling up their dresses and showing off their undergarments. I never understood that trend and am glad it's fading.

Should the bridesmaids always match the groomsmen? Alyssa: You'd be surprised how many men are particular about what they wear on their wedding day. I don't think you need to match completely, and I prefer when the men aren't wearing the exact same shade as the bridesmaids.

Best suggestion for a bride on a budget? Alyssa: Utilize your friends and family! Have a friend who's an amazing photographer or an aunt who can bake like no other? Ask for their help. I'm sure they'd be flattered!

PROS FOR PROSECCO

Both have bubbles, but the resemblance between prosecco and Champagne really ends there. Prosecco is fermented in pressurized tanks and sold young, without aging, and freshness is one of its main strengths—along with fruitiness and moderate pricing. Produced from the local Glera grape variety in northeastern Italy's Veneto region, it's a good go-to choice for casual after-work sipping. The following picks rise above the pack. / Sandy Block

SOMMARIVA, PROSECCO DI CONEGLIANO VALDOBBIADENE SUPERIORE BRUT, NV
Lively and bright, with a tangy crisp apple flavor, this wine is made from grapes grown in the hills of Conegliano and Valdobbiadene, the region's highest quality zone. It's quite juicy and flavorful, with peach and citrus undertones. This can provide a seamless match with lighter seafood dishes, particularly those with delicate creamy sauces. And the sleek designer bottle and label are added pluses.
$17, Ball Square Fine Wines, Somerville

LA MARCA, PROSECCO, NV
With a more delicate, peach-influenced aroma and flavor, this wine provides a bit more yeastiness and creaminess on the palate than you expect from prosecco. Also featuring ripe pear and nectarine notes, it offers a good partner for a shrimp or scallop salad.
$16, Martignetti Liquors, Boston

ADRIANO ADAMI "GARBEL" PROSECCO DI TREVISO BRUT, NV
A third-generation family enterprise, Adriano Adami produces prosecco exclusively from its own grapes. It is light and fresh, with a honey and pear fruit profile and lacy mild texture. The flavors are smooth, but firmly balanced with acid and an almond-like note on the finish. It's very enjoyable with a salad Nicoise.
$16, Martignetti Liquors, Boston

ZARDETTO, PROSECCO DI TREVISO BRUT, NV
This medium-bodied prosecco includes fresh lemon and green apple flavors, but an appealing mineral complexity offsets the fruit flavors, with a delicate but persistent acidity that carries into a lengthy finish. This is an apt complement for a plate of fruit and cheese, but it is also dry and substantial enough to work with a cold antipasto or charcuterie.
$14, Marty's Fine Wines, Newton

DINING WITH HALL

Carla Hall, the Nashville native who hootie hoo-ed her way into the hearts of Top Chef fans as a season five finalist and All-Stars contestant, is still running the show—hosting ABC's The Chew, hoping to open her first restaurant next year and releasing her second cookbook, Carla's Comfort Foods: Favorite Dishes from Around the World. She gave us a taste of what she's been cooking up in advance of her Nov. 1 signing and recipe demo at Lekker Home. / Meghan Kavanaugh

WHAT INSPIRED YOU TO LOOK BEYOND MAC AND CHEESE TO INTERNATIONAL COMFORT FOODS? The idea of this book came about during the political climate of 2008 and how we tend to ostracize people who think differently from us. So I was thinking it would be really nice if we could actually celebrate each other, and I think the way people do celebrate is through food.

AND YOU WANTED TO MAKE IT SIMPLE. I wanted to take away all the reasons why people don't cook at home. That could be time, it could be sourcing ingredients, it could be cleaning up. [The book] was also limited to what you could find at a regular grocery store.

WHAT'S THE BEST FEEDBACK ON THE BOOK YOU'VE RECEIVED? When [readers] say... "Oh, I do this meatloaf, but I changed it and do it differently because of the spice chart." And I'm like, thank you, that's exactly what the book should be used for. It's not only a cookbook; it should be a tool for other dishes that you're making.

YOUR GO-TO COMFORT FOOD? Collard greens and cornbread and a baked sweet potato.

FANS LOVE YOUR POSITIVE ATTITUDE—HOW DO YOU STAY SO UPBEAT? I feel that it's an honor to cook for people. I'm actually putting my energy into the food and giving it to someone, and they're ingesting it.... I say if you're not in a good mood, the only thing you should make is a reservation.

STILL A HOOT: Hall is all about good food and good vibes

Signs of our times

When Jim Botticelli created his "Dirty Old Boston" Facebook page in 2012, he likely had no idea what a phenomenon it would become. Approximately 103,500 likes (and counting) later, what began as a forum for like-minded Bostonians to share memories and post photos of their city over the years has evolved into a book: Dirty Old Boston: Four Decades of a City in Transition. Drawing on archives, albums, professional collections and more, it's a compelling compilation of photographs of iconic Boston figures, sites and moments—as well as gritty snapshots of everyday people and places that capture the spirit of the city from its post-war years through 1987. The book hits shelves Nov. 3, but first, we chose an image from each decade to test your knowledge of this city's storied history. Think you know your stuff? Game on. / Alexandra Cavallo

OFF TO THE RACES

A MEMOIR SHOWS THE SPORT OF KINGS CAN BE FAR FROM NOBLE.

Saving Baby* by Jo Anne Normile and Lawrence Lindner
Published by St. Martin's Press, 320 pages, $26

THE STORYTELLING IN THIS MEMOIR, co-authored by local scribe Lawrence Lindner, is as dramatic as any day at the races. Lifelong horse lover Jo Anne Normile fell for thoroughbred Baby from day one, having served as a midwife for the foal's birth. Though Baby belonged to another breeder, Normile was allowed to keep him—as long as she agreed to race him. So she enters the competitive world of horse racing, proudly following her darling's career successes while beginning to nervously note the legally dubious strategies at work among jockeys and trainers—injections, unhealthy feeding, overlooked injuries and electric buzzers.

Then, fatefully, Baby stops short during a race and—due to the uneven racetrack surface—dies. Normile transforms the pain of mourning into the zeal of reform, taking on an industry resistant to change. Her first target: the dangerous track conditions that led to horses tripping and dying with shocking frequency. Next she founds the nonprofit CANTER, saving thousands of former racehorses from the slaughterhouse. Throughout her story, which includes serious family losses, the ache of missing Baby throbs unremittantly, fueling a crusade with lessons to offer anyone with an impassioned cause.

FROM PAGE 15: My feelings for the new foal grew stronger each day.... Like a puppy, he would run around and release bursts of energy exploring, then quickly fall asleep at my feet, and I'd pet his head as he napped. Sometimes we lay head to head in the pasture together while I put my arm around him. Or I'd sit cross-legged in the grass and he'd put his head in my lap. I loved looking at his beautiful face and his little whiskers—the little beard of curly hairs all newborn foals have. I loved the smell of milk on his mouth. ◆

BERKSHIRES BOUND

NEED AN ARTY FALL ESCAPE? FLY WEST, CULTURE VULTURES.

It's autumn in New England. This is when Mother Nature breaks out her brightest palette to paint treetops in stunning hues of red, orange and gold. Even the fallen leaves make mosaics when scattered across city sidewalks. But to pair your leaf peeping with an art crawl, plug Massachusetts' northwest corner into your GPS—for as long as it can catch a signal, that is. There's a remoteness to this region of the Bay State, but tucked among the peaks and valleys of the Berkshire Mountains are opportunities to discover world-class art against a bucolic backdrop.

First, establish a home base: the Guest House at Field Farm in Williamstown, a town probably best known for its Tony-winning Williamstown Theatre Festival, which annually draws marquee New York film and stage names looking to flex their creative muscle in summer stock. Field Farm is a 316-acre property managed by the Trustees of Reservations, a nonprofit that's the largest private holder of conserved land in the state. (Read: They keep pretty green spaces looking pretty and green.) And its Guest House is a six-room bed and breakfast inside the former home of Lawrence and Eleanor Bloedel, passionate patrons of the arts whose robust collections now line gallery walls at the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York and the Williams College Museum of Art—just a few miles away on rural Route 7.

Many works remain on permanent display at the Guest House, itself an architectural period piece. Built in 1948, the home was designed by Edwin Goodell Jr. in a Bauhaus-influenced style. (The job nearly went to none other than Frank Lloyd Wright.) Utilitarian, utopic and fashionably municipal, the German-born school left a clear mark on the main home, but a second structure, the Folly, built by the Bloedels as a guesthouse in 1968 and now open to tours, reflects the more post-modernist work of Ulrich Franzen. Sleek and spare, the Folly's wood-lined, den-like rooms are arranged around a central shingled silo. (Think artful IKEA. That's not a dis.)

Both buildings are mini museums of modern art and midcentury furnishings—glass-topped tables, swivel chairs, teacarts—many of which were built by Lawrence Bloedel. (You can practically picture a Masters of Sex character draped on the swan-back couch.) And beautiful bronze sculptures are scattered across the property's grounds, which boast four miles of footpaths that meander through forest and wetlands—perfect for wandering after a hearty breakfast from the kitchen.

You'll want to visit the modern-leaning Williams College Museum of Art to see some of the works the Bloedels bequeathed to the institution. But there's much more to view while you're there, from the whimsically naughty mixed media of Franz West to the calligraphic creations in Fathi Hassan: Migration of Signs, an exhibit opening with a series of live drawings by the Nubian artist in November.

MATTHEW LOVETTE / JUMPING ROCKS INC

The nearby Clark Art Institute has an impressive permanent collection that skews toward classic cultural icons—Americans like Homer and Sargent, Renaissance old masters, Impressionist vanguards like Monet, Renoir and Degas. At the heart of the Clark's stately, eco-conscious campus is a wide reflecting pool, surrounded by several walking trails so visitors can behold the natural beauty of the Berkshires between gallery hops.

The Clark recently added an eatery, Cafe Seven, from restaurateur Stephen Starr—the same bigwig behind swanky hotspots like Morimoto. While its farm-to-table ethos admirably raises the bar on museum food (no day-old tuna salad wraps here!), there are a few other noteworthy dining options nearby. American brasserie Hops and Vines offers craft brews and eclectic wines for sipping in a garden by a roaring fire pit, and the country-kitchen digs of Mezze Bistro + Bar are a charming counterpoint to its menu of mostly Mediterranean small plates.

Next up: the neighboring town of North Adams, home to the Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art (Mass MoCA), the country's largest museum of its kind. Galleries ramble (somewhat confusingly) throughout a brick former textile mill, filled with challenging exhibitions like As Above So Below by Teresita Fernandez, featuring immersive, dream-like lunar landscapes rendered in graphite and gold. A labyrinthine three-floor retrospective of Sol LeWitt traces the minimalist artist's work from its earliest stages—elaborate floor-to-ceiling patterns created with light, barely perceptible strokes of pencil—to his Aughties output of bold, neon color bars splashed across massive panels. (And don't miss duo Sayler/Morris' Eclipse, a surprisingly evocative video installation that eulogizes the once-abundant, now-extinct passenger pigeon. Seriously.)

Quaint North Adams also has a number of galleries and live/work artist lofts; the Down Street Art initiative is an excellent resource for where to find them. And sprinkled among the downtown's booksellers and trinket shops are a few excellent eateries, especially PUBLIC eat + drink, an inventive gastropub with a South End sheen.

Williamstown and North Adams are less than an hour from Berkshire havens like Stockbridge, where you'll find nostalgic Americana at the Norman Rockwell Museum, and Lenox, home to Tanglewood summer concerts and the Mount, author Edith Wharton's manse turned (reputedly haunted) museum. Smaller museums, performance art troupes and seasonal cultural festivals can be found throughout these Western Massachusetts towns and merit a looksee on the way home—which you'll especially want to make leisurely at this time of year, the better to soak up every second of that fleeting annual show of perfectly painted trees. ◆

CARDINAL VIRTUE

RED BIRD ALIGHTS WITH A WELCOME DOSE OF CASUAL REFINEMENT.

RED BIRD
361 Moody St., Waltham
redbirdwaltham.com

Most Boston food nerds know our near-neighbor Waltham as worth the short trip, with a dining smorgasbord that includes Indian, Guatemalan, Cuban, Taiwanese, Mexican, deli and even an East African spot. But restaurant-rich Waltham had room for another casual, moderately priced place that is as much a bar as a restaurant, but still takes its food seriously. Such is the new Red Bird, whose chef/owner, Daniel Stokes, comes from a longtime Boston purveyor of the style, the South End's Franklin Cafe and the Franklin Southie.

The bar immediately impresses with original cocktails like the Lost Sailor ($10): Old Monk rum, amaretto and lime. It's topped with the slightly passe molecular touch of coconut foam, but stir that into the drink and you're in delicious 1930s-vintage Tiki cocktail territory. The In Cahoots ($10) is another winner, mixing Uncle Val's botanical gin, rhubarb cordial, yellow Chartreuse, Maraschino and lime into a fine gloss on the Last Word. The tightly curated beer list—eight drafts and 18 bottles ($5-$14)—focuses on small, mostly local producers, as in a bottle of Brooklyn Oktoberfest ($5), a full-bodied Märzen with a beautiful coppery color. Somerville's own Bantam Wunderkind on tap ($7) pours as pale and crystalline as Champagne and avoids the oversweetness of many hard ciders with a pleasing dry tartness.

The very affordable wine list boasts 20 wines by the glass ($8-$14), all available as bottles ($36-$54), plus five "select" bottles ($65-$85). It includes food-friendly whites like a 2013 Henri Bourgeois sauvignon blanc ($10 / $42) from Sancerre, with its crisp accents of lemon and peach, and the 2012 Später-Veit riesling feinherb ($10) from Mosel, with its faintly off-dry whiffs of apple and grapefruit (though all whites are served a little too warm). Reds are similarly interesting, inexpensive and great with food, like the brambly, peppery 2012 Breca Garnacha de Fuego ($12 / $48) from Catalonia, and the 2012 Château de Flaugergues syrah

($10 / $42) from Languedoc, with its chewy flavors of cherry and sweet spices.

Bar snacks include a Scotch egg ($5) encased in Italian sausage and deep-fried in panko crumbs (quick to disappear) and a soft pretzel ($5) with mustard sauce (a bit overbaked). Carnitas tamale ($10) is better, its slow-braised pork shoulder in masa dough complemented beautifully by a complex pumpkin mole and cheddar, with a hunk of grill-charred lime to squeeze over it. Stokes' gifts are clearest when he's working the French idiom. For instance, he elevates French onion soup ($8) beyond cliche with an intense beef broth, meltingly caramelized onions and just the right layer of stretchy Gruyère. A salad of mixed greens ($8) with apple and English cheddar is perfectly underdressed with chardonnay vinaigrette; bits of almond brittle provide sweet crunch. Pan-roasted chicken breast ($23) shows real technique, managing the rare achievement of moist breast meat with brownly crisped skin, classically arrayed with rapini, new potatoes and cipollini onions in a superb sherry-mustard pan jus.

An appetizer of medium-weight housemade gnocchi ($12) is a just-right Italian secondo portion with rich adornments of braised veal cheek, wild mushrooms and a sweetish Madeira jus. Larger pasta portions are similarly hearty and deep-flavored, as in rustici ($20), gemelli-like twists mixed with pancetta, arugula, a lot of excellent duck confit and a well-calibrated blast of garlic, with cranberry beans providing a lovely creamy texture. Pork loin schnitzel ($26) is well-treated with very light breading; the terrific accompanying bacon-braised cabbage, tender handmade spätzle and good gravy make it fantastic cool-weather eating. Stokes can do southern, too: His buttermilk fried oysters ($10) benefit from skillful deep-frying with panko, and the underlying creamed spinach is a delightful, original accompaniment. Blackened catfish ($21) shows restraint with its spicy coating, its thin filet draped over spectacular creamy grits layered with barely cooked collard greens and bits of tart lime flesh: a superb rendition of a once-iconic dish that rarely gets such careful treatment. Desserts delicately meld complementary flavors in not-too-fussy presentations, as in caramelized pineapple ($11) with mango-ginger chutney and vanilla ice cream, nicely punched up with rosy Brazilian peppercorns.

The 68-seat room is an attractive makeover of the old Tuscan Grill space, mixing black subway tile, brown marble bartop, patterned upholstery in shades of cream and sage, Edison bulb chandeliers, high ceilings, exposed rafters and whitewashed brick—modern and urban, cool but relaxed. Service is friendly and a bit looser than one finds in Boston, but the occasional flub in pacing or accuracy is made easier to swallow by pleasant prices. From its perch on busy Moody Street, Red Bird ultimately takes flight as the kind of neighborhood place every neighborhood needs more of: a good, versatile bar paired with a serious kitchen, offering everyday prices in a handsome, comfy package—a useful American reinvention of the European bistro. ◆

HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

➜ iFest, a weekend celebration of Irish food and culture, held a gala opening on Sept. 26 at the Seaport World Trade Center with the Barbara Lynch Foundation. While 1,500 people mingled through the exhibition, 250 sponsors and VIP guests attended a dinner prepared by celebrity chefs Lydia Shire and Darina Allen. The charity received $1,800 from a raffle to support of Up and Out, Lynch's program providing leadership, education and resources to inner-city children and families.

➜ Washington Gateway Main Street hosted its 11th annual NeckTies benefit on Oct. 8, with 19 South End restaurants serving dinners after a cocktail party and auction at the Franklin House. The nonprofit, which serves the needs of small businesses in the South End and Lower Roxbury, presented its Tie Award to Flour and Myers + Chang chef/owner Joanne Chang for her contributions to the community. The evening's 225 guests raised $35,000.

ASK CHERYL

Q: I EXERCISE (WELL, KIND OF) BUT I STILL HAVE A TUMMY PAUNCH AND FAT ON THE INSIDE OF MY THIGHS. NOTHING SEEMS TO WORK; THOUGHTS?

A: Yes, we can help with CoolSculpting, which is a quick and safe non-surgical body contouring treatment. The procedure freezes unwanted fat, killing off fat cells, which are then naturally eliminated from your body. No needles, no surgery, and no downtime. It is safe and effective.

Many of us have fatty areas, such as our love handles or saddlebags, that resist diet and exercise. CoolSculpting uses controlled cooling to target and crystallize fat cells; only fat cells are affected. After treatment, the crystallized fat cells are gradually removed by the immune system, resulting in a noticeable reduction.

Results are visible within four weeks of treatment and the final results are seen after three months. This is a great treatment for your boyfriend or husband also!

SPECIAL OFFER:
Mention the Improper and receive $50 off your first treatment of $100 or more Offer expires 12-31-14. May not be combined with other offers.

TIGHT AS A DRUM

TELLER AND SIMMONS DON'T MISS A BEAT IN CHAZELLE'S SUNDANCE HIT.

WHIPLASH ★★★½

Starring Miles Teller, J.K. Simmons, Melissa Benoist, Austin Stowell, Nate Lang, C.J. Vana, Chris Mulkey, Suanne Spoke and Paul Reiser. Written and directed by Damien Chazelle. At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.

EVEN BEFORE THE TITLE WHIPLASH comes into focus in the center of the black screen, a quickening beat from a snare drum compels your attention, the single stroke roll building with almost military precision until it ends with an echo, as if a muted gunshot has gone off.

But there are no physical weapons deployed in writer/director Damien Chazelle's picture—only psychological warfare, focused on 19-year-old Andrew Neiman, a drum prodigy in his first semester at Manhattan's Shaffer Conservatory. The darkness ceding, we first view our protagonist through a cavernous hallway as he adjusts the cymbals on his kit. As he resumes his rhythmic rolling, Chazelle's camera begins rolling too, pushing in at eye level on Neiman as he sweats all over his drums.

Sparsely illuminated by only a few overhead lights, we pass through the darkened doorway of his practice space as Neiman abruptly stops, staring toward us, stammering, "Uh, I'm sorry, sorry."

"No, stay," comes an older voice from the hallway; we've been seeing through the eyes of Terence Fletcher, top conductor in this fictionalized version of Juilliard, or our own New England Conservatory. From Neiman's perspective, Fletcher quite literally emerges from darkness, striking fear into the young musician.

Menacingly portrayed by J.K. Simmons, Fletcher is a figure in black but for his shiny bald pate, which frames an icy stare and a perpetual smirk that could unleash either a smile or a snarl. Seductive and terrifying, Fletcher makes Vern Schillinger, the Detroit native's character on HBO's Oz, look like Mr. Holland.

"You know who I am?" Fletcher asks. "Yes, sir," says the timid Neiman, played by 27-year-old Miles Teller, the exciting newcomer who stood his own opposite Nicole Kidman in his debut, 2010's Rabbit Hole.

"Then why did you stop playing?"

Resuming, Neiman flails about as Fletcher stands unmoving—and apparently unmoved. Cutting the boy short, he continues, "I asked you why you stopped playing, and your version of an answer was to turn into a wind-up monkey." Taking off his blazer, Fletcher pushes Neiman through a series of punishing drills, beginning a duel that will last through the film's final, electrifying frames.

There are no physical weapons deployed in Chazelle's picture—only psychological warfare.

Fletcher's smelled blood, and he takes Neiman on as a new protege, one who adopts some of his instructor's social skills. Before becoming the youngest member of the "greatest school jazz band in the world," Neiman lacked the confidence to ask out the sweet girl (Glee's Melissa Benoist) who works the concession stand at the repertory movie house he regularly visits with his dad (Paul Reiser). But under Fletcher's tutelage, he's willing to nip the blossoming romance in the bud. "I want to be one of the greats," he tells her, coldly concluding, "This is why I think we shouldn't be together."

Later, over dinner with family, his uncle (Chris Mulkey) asks, "Do you have any friends, Andy?" Neiman responds with one of Fletcher's oft-told stories: Charlie Parker didn't know anyone until Jo Jones threw a cymbal at his feet, prompting Parker to buckle down and embark on his successful career as "Bird."

"Dying broke and drunk and full of heroin at the age of 34 is not exactly my idea of success," observes Neiman's dad, a failed writer whose wife left long ago.

"I'd rather die broke, drunk at 34, and have people at a dinner table talk about me than live to be rich and sober at 90 and have no one remember who I was," replies a smug Neiman.

Neiman's hubris is matched by Fletcher's, whose Nietzschean methods and homophobic slurs sting, but Chazelle (the talent behind the little-seen, charming 2009 musical Guy and Madeline on a Park Bench) seems to imply that this is exactly what Neiman needs.

Neiman pushes himself so hard for his taskmaster—and his art—that his hands become raw and bloodied. Chazelle's drama nearly doubles as a horror film, with Neiman a man driven to kill, his drum set the victim. "I push people beyond what's expected of them," Fletcher tells Neiman after the two have nearly destroyed one another. "There are no two words in the English language more harmful than 'Good job.'"

Chazelle appears to abide by this philosophy as well. A graduate of Harvard, the 29-year-old Providence native had been a jazz ensemble drummer throughout high school, but the pursuit was a source of constant dread. He transformed his experience into an award-winning short film in 2013—but that wasn't good enough. Expanding that short into this feature, he won both the Grand Jury and Audience Awards when it premiered at this year's Sundance Film Festival.

The opening scene is basically replayed throughout, and like a great jazz riff, the film becomes a series of variations on a theme: the student failing to live up to his teacher's standards, and his own. And like many a great jazz song—and there are many deployed here, from Hank Levy's title track to Duke Ellington's "Caravan," plus Justin Hurwitz's original score and Tim Simonec's big-band orchestrations—the movie is sometimes unwieldy. (Some second-act contrivances stand out.) But it builds to a hugely satisfying finish, aided by award-worthy contributions from nearly all involved; the richly lit and shadowed interiors captured by cinematographer Sharone Meir and Tom Cross' fluid, up-tempo editing serve Chazelle's demands spectacularly well.

"The truth is, Andrew, I never had a Charlie Parker," Fletcher laments as the two share a rare quiet moment. But with Teller, and especially Simmons, Chazelle may have found two. ◆

plays Great Scott on Nov. 7

SONIC SCIENTIST

ANDOVER NATIVE FINDS WARMTH IN VERMONT-HATCHED ELECTRONIC MUSIC.

AFTER HE DROPPED THE WORD "CATAPULT" into his song "IO," Nick Zammuto decided to take it over the top. He spent $600 on lumber at Home Depot and built a giant medieval-style catapult in his Vermont yard to film a video, delighting family and friends by launching objects hundreds of feet. Then he loaded up a birthday cake.

"That was my favorite moment of the year," he says. "[The cake] went straight up in the air and couldn't stand the G-forces and just broke into a million pieces and rained frosting... I know those kids will never forget it as long as they live."

Zammuto loves to experiment at the home he shares with his wife and young sons on 16 acres of mountain meadow just over the Massachusetts-Vermont border. He's built devices that play spoons or project laser patterns through speaker vibrations. And he designed a simple tool that calibrates where to gouge lines across a vinyl record's usually quiet end grooves so anyone can create beats for automatic playback.

But the most far-reaching innovation for the co-founder of defunct New York collage-pop duo the Books was the creation of Anchor, Zammuto's second solo album, recorded in the studio that he built in a tractor garage across his yard.

It's a haunting yet playful, largely electronic album that casts warm shadows through Zammuto's less-manipulated vocals, analog gear acquired through fundraising for the record, and live drums by polyrhythmic ace Sean Dixon.

"I tried to turn my studio into a microscope for sound," Zammuto says from his rural homestead before his namesake band embarks on an East Coast tour that hits Great Scott on Nov. 7. "It's very focused and very quiet, and there are no distractions. I don't have the Internet out there. I don't have a phone out there. I just create an environment where I get totally sucked into the detail of things."

The microscope analogy comes naturally to Zammuto, 39, who double-majored in art and chemistry at Williams College. "I'm a scientist—that's what I am at my core," he says. "I was going to be a research chemist and got halfway through my thesis before I realized that I didn't want to spend the rest of my life under fluorescent lights, working for a corporation." So he shifted to visual arts and became involved with music by working on sound sculptures. "Music was a really late development, sort of an accidental career," Zammuto says. "It was really unexpected that people liked what I was doing, but it encouraged me."

"It was really unexpected that people liked what I was doing, but it encouraged me."

Growing up in Andover, Zammuto certainly enjoyed music. In middle school, he began frequenting the library to borrow records by Ornette Coleman, Weather Report and Kraftwerk, already gravitating to experimental and electronic music as well as Fugazi and Primus. "Now I listen to music mostly for production," he says, citing Brian Eno and Radiohead producer Nigel Godrich among his inspirations.

"With Anchor, I wanted to do something darker and quieter," Zammuto says. "As I get older, I'm not into the frenetic stuff." The September release still ranges from the sparse, atmospheric tracks "Stop Counting" and "Your Time" to the schizoid garage-pop swinger "IO," the bass-wound "Need Some Sun" and "Code Breaker," which bubbles over tricky time changes that evoke early '80s King Crimson.

He recorded the album mainly by himself, playing synthesizers and some guitar and bass and developing ideas through trial and error. The New York-based Dixon joined to counter electronic rhythms with acoustic drums, and the band's filled out live by Zammuto's brother Mikey (bass) and Nick Oddy (guitar, keyboards).

"There's a bit of retrofitting that goes on, but Anchor was really meant to be played live, so the four of us can really cover everything," Zammuto says of his group, which often plays to synched videos. He describes himself as "the man behind the curtain. I have a lot of stuff going on that keeps everything together."

Just don't expect the same formula for his next album. "I don't want to repeat myself," Zammuto says. "If I'm systematically losing my audience because of that, that's OK. I just need to get by." ◆

GOING VIRAL

A BEGINNER'S GUIDE TO EBOLA

THIS WHOLE EBOLA THING HAS ME REALLY afraid. Not afraid that I'll get Ebola, or that mankind will be wiped out by Ebola, but afraid that I'm missing out on a Category 5 media frenzy. I just got back from the gym, where the TVs are locked on cable news, and for a solid hour there was nothing but Ebola talk. The only escape was ESPN, and even there I feel like we're about two days away from a Pardon the Interruption segment called "Ebola: What Did the NFL Know, and When?"

Naturally, I want to get in on this action. I studied up on Ebola so I could write a levelheaded, rational assessment to help you understand the myths and realities of this virus. Enough with the hysteria. Really, the only reason to even keep reading this is if you want to live. No big deal.

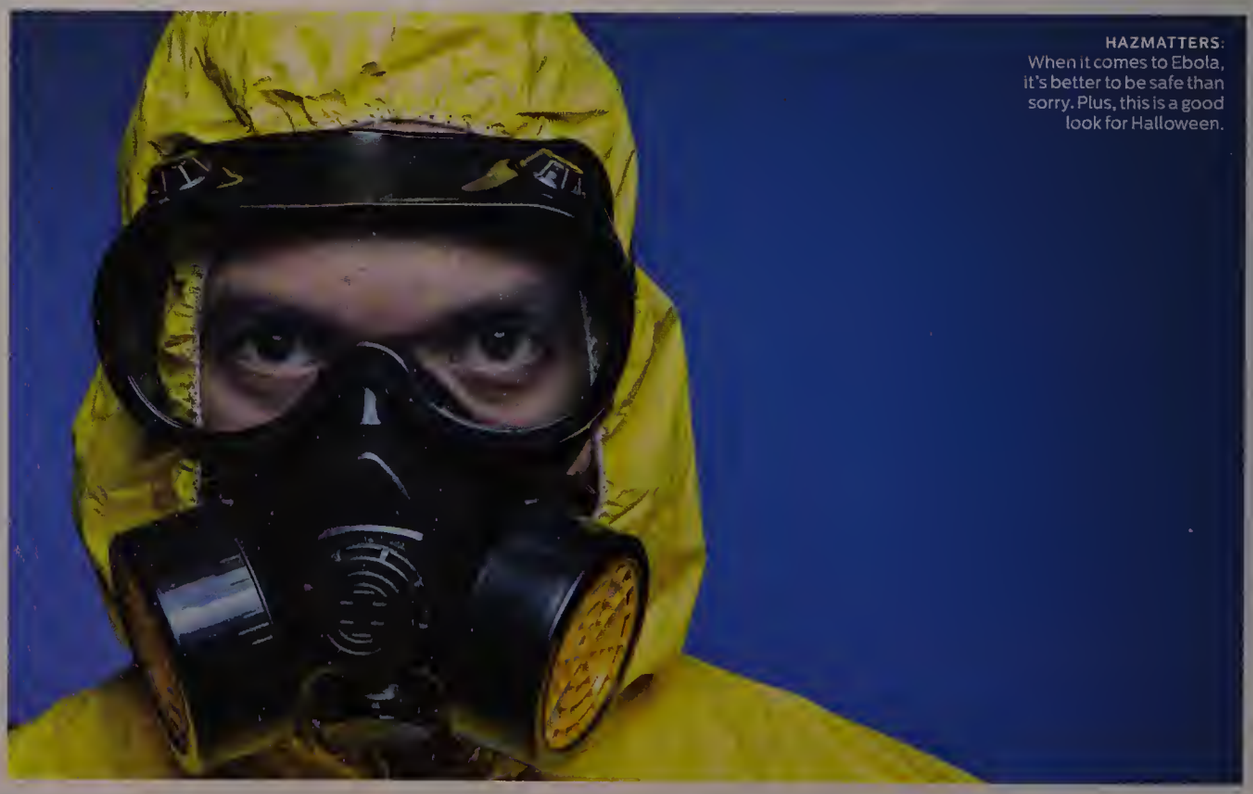
First of all, there's been a lot of confusion about what Ebola is. The news segments inevitably show a graphic of what looks like a big piece of string. Is Ebola a big piece of string? No. That image is magnified as much as five times. Real Ebola is more like a small piece of string, no larger than a shoelace. Luckily I wear Velcro shoes, so there's no danger of me getting confused with "Here's the rabbit, here's the great big tree, here's blood coming out of my eyes because that's Ebola, not a shoelace." My footwear roster also includes a pair of Vibram FiveFingers, but that has nothing to do with Ebola and everything to do with looking good.

Now that you know how to identify Ebola, you need to know how it's transmitted. Let's dispel the myth that you can catch Ebola from a toilet seat—no, you can't. It's not like crabs. Ebola is actually hard to catch, like a bus when you're running late. Although once you're on a bus, then it's really easy to catch.

Keep that in mind when you're on the No. 9 and the guy next to you is coughing—coughing is a primary symptom. Bleeding out the rectum is another, so try to inconspicuously ascertain if anyone's doing that. If you identify a passenger with that particular symptom, yell "Quarantine!" and build a makeshift wall out of coats and handbags. Do not listen if he or she attributes the condition to "a bad case of the Mondays."

We're just playing it safe. Luckily, we're still at the stage where far more people think they have Ebola than actually do. With Ebola, it's not "He who denied it is the one who supplied it." More like "He who did boast it does not really host it." So if you develop nausea and diarrhea, don't tell anybody. You'll only look foolish when it turns out you just have salmonella, and at any rate, you don't want to get uninvited from the office apple-bobbing contest. If a co-worker in the next stall hears you throwing up, just say you were watching Debra Messing's new show, The Mysteries of Laura. They'll understand.

Now, with Halloween coming up, you'll probably want to know whether Ebola-themed costumes are fair game. I'd say it depends. You could go the biohazard-suit route, and then if someone takes offense you can just say you're Walter White from Breaking Bad. But Ebola is a tough sell for Halloween because Halloween is the sexiest holiday of the year, and Ebola is frankly not that sexy. But the flu? That's a different story. Go the flu route and you can be a sexy CVS Minute Clinic pharmacist and give people their shots, by which I mean tequila. Next patient. Rowwwwrrrrr.



Ebola is a tough sell for Halloween because Halloween is the sexiest holiday of the year, and Ebola is frankly not that sexy.

Once the Halloween parties have wrapped up, it might be a good time to take that vacation you've been thinking about. No, not the one to Liberia, the one to rural Montana, where there are .002 humans per square mile. "Ain't No Ebola Here," as it says on the license plates. But if you can't go somewhere till the heat dies down, I'd recommend a few common-sense guidelines to stay safe.

Hold your breath in elevators. Don't share chewing gum with strangers. Avoid blood oaths. Don't leave the house. Boil all your clothes. Stop vaping with your cab driver. Refrain from wrestling at the sweat lodge. When you're on a plane in an emergency and the oxygen masks come down, wipe yours off with hand sanitizer before putting it on and tweeting a photo of yourself. This is all easy stuff that anyone can do.

In the meantime, remember: This isn't swine flu, or bird flu, or mad cow disease, or hoof and mouth disease, or SARS. It's Ebola, which is newer and capitalized—that's Mister Ebola to you. Now get back behind that pile of coats. You're in quarantine. ◆

Think that's funny? Send unbiased emails to ezra@improper.com.

HAZMATTERS: When it comes to Ebola, it's better to be safe than sorry. Plus, this is a good look for Halloween.

INVITE TROUBLE

SOUND ADVICE ON WEDDING RSVPS, COLLEGE SAVINGS AND HAIRY SITUATIONS

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is the Boston Globe No. 1 best-seller No One Ever Told Us That, a collection of letters with life lessons for his grandchildren. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

I sent out invitations to my ultra-lavish wedding two months ago. The deadline for RSVPs is one day away, and I've only received about 50 percent of the RSVPs. I feel like it's a privilege to be invited to a wedding in general, and especially one of this caliber. My guests have a choice of four appetizers and four entrees, and an open bar with fine wines and top-shelf liquor. And it's not an annoying all-day affair—it's a 5 pm wedding with the shortest ceremony ever! So I don't understand how people are taking their sweet time with this. How easy is it to pick your food and pop the thing in the mail or simply decline? I feel like if you're not going, decline ASAP so it gives the hosts a chance to invite their B-lists for crying out loud! Anyhow, my question is, how should I go about confirming the RSVPs that haven't come in? Do I call the people or just assume they are not coming? I have a deadline when I must submit our food choices and seating chart, and I wouldn't want to accommodate people who forgot to RSVP, but at the same time I would feel bad if I told them there is no more space for them... Oh what to do! Coincidentally, I went to a 5 pm wedding last night, and I'm still in bed at brunch time. I asked the mother of the bride about her experience with the invitation process. "Well, this woman who asked the question did everything right," she said, "except anticipating the cluelessness and lack of manners in today's America."

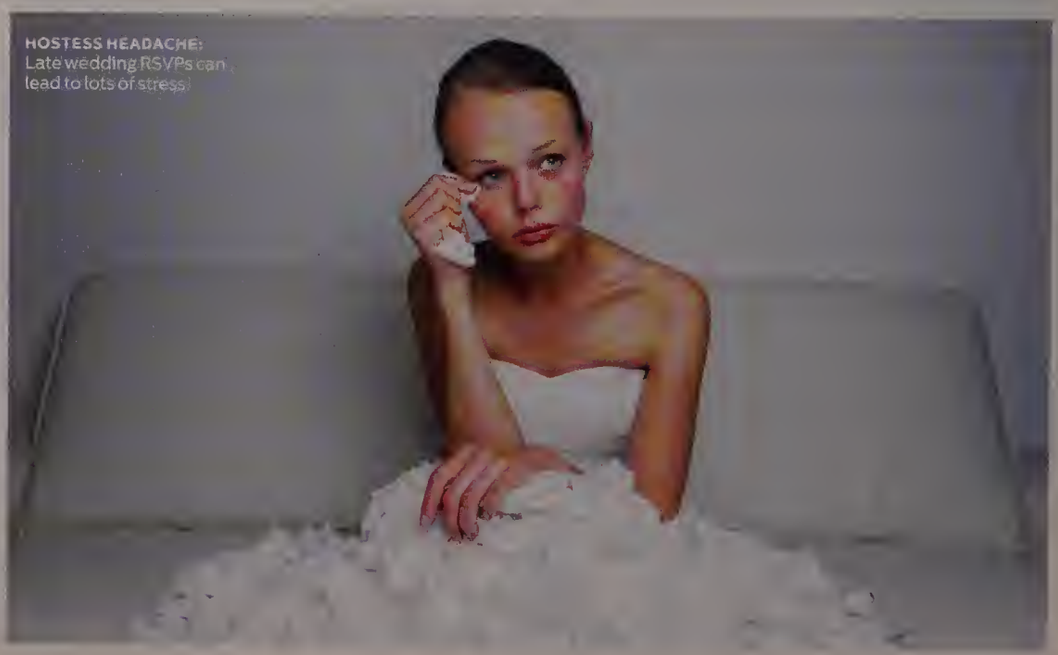
I know that one of the problems here is what I call "misinformation overload." We're all swamped with social media, texting and email. But old-fashioned invitations on fine paper stock should get even clueless people's attention.

My friend, the mother of the bride, believes in leaving nothing to chance. "I was prepared for even my best friends to let their responses slip between the cracks. So when invitations were sent, I called my five most obsessive-compulsive friends and got them to promise that the day after the responses were due, they would come to lunch at my house with their cellphones. We split up the list of everyone who hadn't responded and called them. Made it easy, social and fun. Made it a game."

Her last thoughts on the subject: "Half of the guests not responding is kind of shocking. Maybe I'd tell them, 'Don't bother coming—just send a present.'"

I say, let them eat cake!

With a baby on the way, I'm looking to start a 529 plan for her to hopefully offset crazy college costs. (It seems like it could be six figures a year by 2030!) But I saw that the Massachusetts fund scores very poorly. Should I invest elsewhere so that I have more autonomy over the growth of the investment? For those reading this question, the basic 529 plans are investment vehicles primarily designed to fund college education. The monies that flow into them are free from taxes on income and gains. When withdrawals are taken for tuition payments, they also come out of the plans tax-free. There is no tax advantage to buying strictly Massachusetts offerings. You can go to any state, and there seem to be endless choices for the consumer. Go to savingforcollege.com, which offers about as much information as anyone can handle. I think it's a fine and efficient way to save for something so important and increasingly expensive.



One alternative that gives a lot of leeway is the custodian account—it's very flexible, with almost no restrictions on what you can put into the account when it comes to stocks and bonds. But income and capital gains are completely taxable, and you can give up a lot for this flexibility. Quick answers are often not enough for investors, but these quick answers, I hope, will at least get you started.

Hi there! I'm hoping you can help. I went to get a perm at a Boston salon—pretty well known, in fact. However, the perm didn't hold, and I had to go in for another perm. Again the perm did not hold, and I was not satisfied. The stylist told me it would work, and I thought that's what a consultation was for? If she's familiar with my type of hair, then why would it not hold? I've tried calling and emailing the salon but got no response back. Am I asking too much to get a partial refund? Or is that how the hair business is? Pay $200 for a perm and get ripped off for no results? Well, nothing in life is permanent, not even a perm. People who promise us things disappoint us all the time. How about no-show contractors? Plumber's-crack plumbers who never really fix the leak? The cable guy? The millions who say for richer or poorer, in sickness and in health, till death do us part? Or CEOs who, shaking hands on a merger deal, say, "Nothing will change!" when what they mean is "Everything will change!"

Feel better about the perm now? No? Well, I have two suggestions. The first: It will be worth spending a little money with another stylist to find out if the problem is the hairdresser or your hair. Give it another try.

The second: At the new salon, tell them up front that you have a lot of friends in the media—and that if you are happy with your new perm, you will spread the word. This also implies that if you are unhappy, word will get around. Know what I'm saying? Makes you different from the other customers. They'll pay more attention.

But you did get a second perm for free. ◆

SOUND AND VISION

THE COMPOSER TALKS ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE, HYPERINSTRUMENTS AND THAT MISSING D.

PIONEERING COMPOSER AND INVENTOR TOD MACHOVER, 60, is presenting his latest work, Vocal Vibrations, as the inaugural exhibition at Le Laboratoire Cambridge. Opening Oct. 31 and on view through March, the music-filled installation features a vibrating orb device that allows visitors to hold their own voices in hand. Born in New York, Machover received his bachelor's and master's degrees in composition from Juilliard. The composer of five operas—including 2012 Pulitzer finalist Death and the Powers—he is the director of the MIT Media Lab's Opera of the Future group. He's also the creator of the Toy Symphony, an international performance and education project, and his inventions include tech-enhanced hyperinstruments used by performers like Yo-Yo Ma and Prince. This summer, he will serve as the composer in residence of the prestigious Lucerne Festival in Switzerland.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Did you ever want another "d" in your name?
TOD MACHOVER: I did, only because everybody spells it wrong. The reason for the one "d" was that my dad, who was a pioneer in computer graphics, was a very smart guy, but spelling wasn't his strong suit. He always said that he only gave me one "d" so that if someone said it was spelled wrong, he could say, "No, it isn't."

How does it feel to have lost the Pulitzer Prize to someone named Kevin Puts? [Laughs] You never know what goes on behind closed doors. Honestly, I think a couple of things. Silent Night is a very good opera, but very conservative, about the Christmas night in World War I when the soldiers declared a truce, in maybe 1915. It's a really great story and a very traditional opera. My work's not traditional, and I think it's wonderful that a very unconventional opera with robots and text by Robert Pinsky was even in the running.

So why opera? Good question. I grew up really not liking opera at all. I played the cello, so I played Bach solo and chamber music and then rock music. With opera, I didn't like most of the stories. But I realized, when I began making my own music, that all of it is about some kind of human experience, and I got more and more interested in music with words.

Where did the idea for hyperinstruments come from? When I was at Juilliard, I was kind of Elliott Carter's protege, and I thought I would write instrumental music. I kept imagining things in my head that were crazy—textures that were difficult to achieve with traditional instruments or layers...and that's when the light bulb went off that connected me to what my dad did. I thought if I could really master software and technology, I might actually be able to achieve this.

Must have been a radical approach. It was. Nobody at Juilliard was interested in technology. It was sort of after the Moog synthesizer and before computers. Back then, the image, for good or bad, if you were a composing student, was to be like Beethoven and compose everything in your head, as if you were deaf. You had to imagine everything in your inner ear, and the idea of trying it out at the piano was laughable.

So was technology an escape from that? Absolutely. I wanted not only to make sounds, but I wanted to play with and manipulate my music in a way that only technology offered. Like a sculptor with clay. I wanted to touch it with my hands.

What did Yo-Yo Ma say about playing the cello hyperinstrument you built for him? Well, that cello involves a lot of wires and computers, so his best response was when someone asked him, "What would it take for you to stop playing your Stradivarius and tour with this?" You'd expect him to say, "It would have to feel and sound as good," but what he said was "I'll tour with this when it's as easy to get around as my Strad." Unfortunately, even today, that's not the case. It still needs a sound engineer, and probably some wires.

Are computers capable of producing music without the collaboration of a human being? I think I'll glibly say no. I'm at MIT. Marvin Minsky, who invented artificial intelligence, is an idol of mine. He probably would believe they could. But I think the reason to have technology is to allow people to be more human.

"I wanted to play with and manipulate my music.... Like a sculptor with clay. I wanted to touch it with my hands."

Really? Yes, but not just in the stupid sense of it can save you time, or whatever. The idea of the hypercello we built for Yo-Yo Ma was that it would measure his feelings and expression and bring more of that out. The idea that the instrument reads your mind or your body is the point of that. The reason I did Hyperscore [a software program for music composition] is so that someone who hasn't taken 20 years of music lessons can still make music. I think technology is like art—a way to communicate about life. That implies a sense of caring, and I don't think a machine can care.

Coolest technology you want but don't have? The thing we're trying to invent now, the technology goes back to the Yo-Yo story. An instrument that becomes part of the performer and sort of disappears into what the artist is doing. We know a lot more now about how to read the mind and body, and we're inventing the new generation of hyperinstruments to be many, many more degrees in tune to the body and ultimately, hopefully, something as simple as an iPhone. We're not there, but that's the goal.

So does music really soothe the savage breast? It affects our bodies, emotions and souls very deeply. But I think it goes even beyond that. It grapples with every aspect of existence. The idea that the pianist Jonathan Biss describes—that music like Beethoven's goes beyond our perception. It encompasses things that are so huge, like the universe, that we can't countenance.

So is it the food of love? It could be. But I think it could make you hate somebody, too. Music can do just about anything. ◆

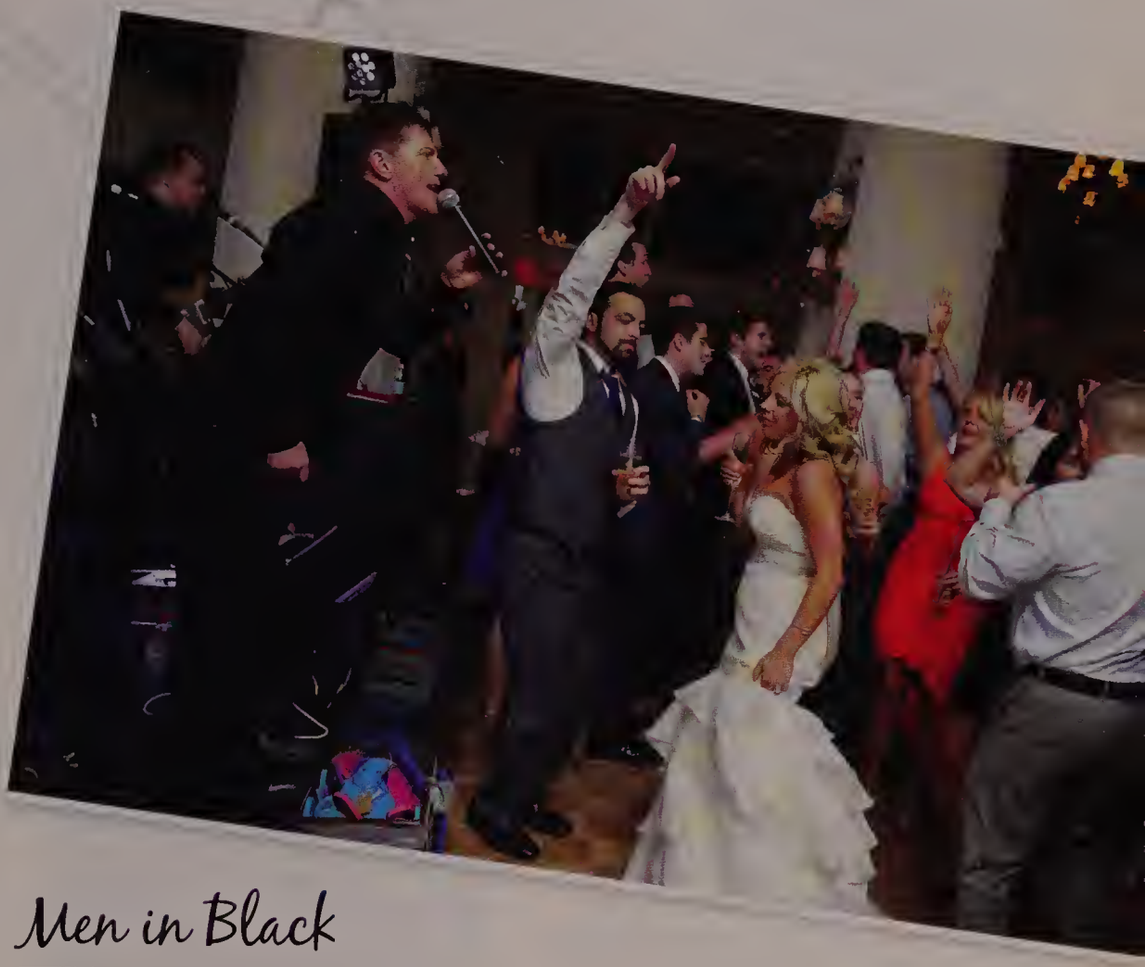
Making Beautiful Music Together



Boston wedding bands get a warm reception of their own

By Carley D. Thornell

Illustrated By Steve Mardo

For some couples, wedding bands are just the shiny new bling they'll exchange at the altar. But for others, they're the source of sounds that will ring out at their reception and fill up the dance floor. With a talent pool that pulls from the likes of New England Conservatory and Berklee College of Music, Boston's rich music scene has something to suit every couple's tastes, from rock and R&B to swing, bluegrass and beyond. Here, some of the city's notable wedding bands sound off on memorable gigs and first-dance favorites.

Men in Black

Call him Boston's Best Man. Jeff Fraser, the frontman of Men in Black, has been to an estimated 1,000 weddings in a 20-year career, during which he's sung outdoors in crashing thunderstorms, performed on the set of the Sandra Bullock movie The Proposal and even become the center of attention at the reception for one of Boston's most famous musicians—Tim Brennan of the Dropkick Murphys.

"We tried not to make a big deal out of it and not be snapping photos," Fraser says of the Boston Harbor Hotel gig. "I'm sure they wouldn't want us to be all star-struck, even though I was. These guys are pretty big-time, and they pretty much let us do our thing. They didn't give us a ton of direction—just not to play Dropkick songs—and we ran with it."

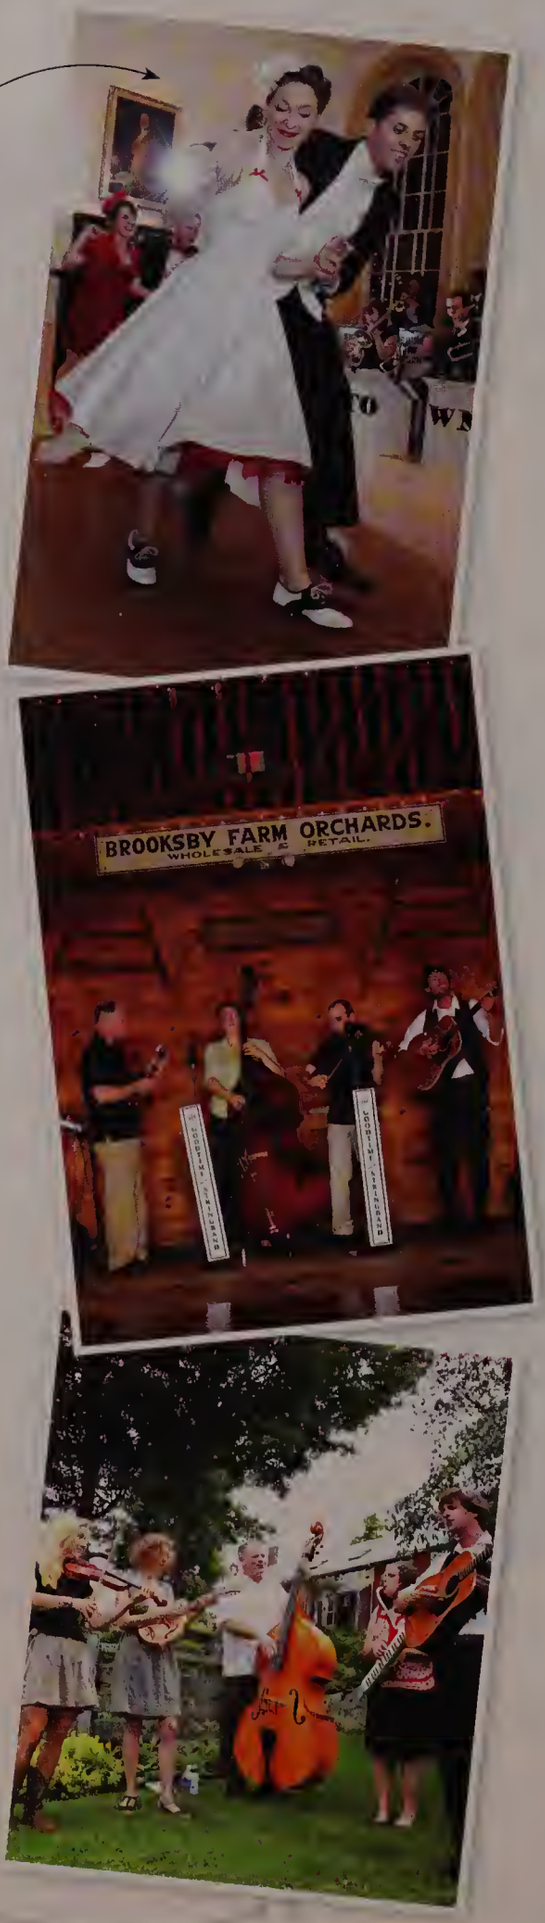
That's the band's preferred MO: While they're happy to cater to clients' specifications, couples who've heard good things by word of mouth usually trust them to freestyle. "We know our tricks to get the dance floor packed the whole night," Fraser says. "I interact, I go out into the audience, I bring my guitar out there. You win 'em over that way."

Some other tricks? Without a doubt, "Shout" always brings a crowd to its feet, Fraser says. As for first dances, John Legend's "All of Me" and "I Choose You" by Sara Bareilles are this year's new favorites, and Ray LaMontagne's "You Are the Best Thing" has taken the cake for the past five years.

But MIB's most unique first dance was to a Rocky Horror tune. "The bride and groom met doing The Rocky Horror Picture Show. They acted out the 'Time Warp' with the whole cast at the Museum of Science. It was hilarious ... and definitely a different venue."

As for Fraser's favorite places to play, he loves tents and barns, like Gibbet Hill in Groton. "Barn weddings and tent weddings are so good, but that's probably me being selfish ... People just go crazy, insane on the dance floor. I think it's because they're outside or something—it seems like they go crazier every time."

Beantown Swing Orchestra



As founders of the Boston Lindy Bomb Squad, a "street team" promoting swing dance, Kellian and Brian Pletcher had one requirement for their 1940s-themed wedding reception: They had to have a band, and it had to be Beantown Swing Orchestra. "Dancing brought us such joy, and we wanted to share that," Kellian says of their celebration at the Peabody Essex Museum, where eight swing aficionados joined the bride and groom for their first dance, a moment she calls one of her "all-time favorite memories."

The night was also a career highlight for the 18-piece-plus outfit, according to Beantown Swing director Frank Hsieh, who relishes a repertoire that drives all generations to the dance floor. "It's great—the audience, whether we play weddings, concerts or dances, especially the older folks, they love seeing younger people playing the classic music that they grew up with," Hsieh says. "What really makes us stand out among other bands is most others doing this are older people."

At 27, Beantown's fresh-faced Sinatra-style crooner, John Stevens, certainly brings youthful energy—and some star power to boot. He and fellow vocalists Siobhan Magnus and Erika Van Pelt were all American Idol finalists. "When we play weddings, always there's John with the grandmas and teenage girls, all wanting to get a photo," Hsieh says.

Reality TV isn't the band's only brush with fame: They were featured in the Boston-filmed Kate Hudson movie My Best Friend's Girl. When Jason Biggs accidentally tripped and shattered his microphone stand during filming, the actor just laughed and incorporated it into the slapstick scene, Hsieh recalls.

In addition to Stevens, Beantown Swing features several other Berklee College of Music alums who agree that performing classics never gets old. "You'd think we'd get sick of 'I'm in the Mood for Love,' but it's great," Hsieh says. "'My Girl,' 'Can't Take My Eyes Off You' ... they're not cheesy wedding songs; they're really great arrangements, and we're one of the few wedding bands that play those songs with strings, the way they were meant to be played."

The Goodtime Stringband

Goodtime Stringband founder Andy Sicard isn't simply a multi-instrumentalist who can play a mean mandolin, upright bass and banjo—he's also a talented arranger, capable of coaxing bluegrass rhythms from tunes as diverse as Barry White's "You're the First, the Last, My Everything" and Foster the People's "Pumped Up Kicks." "Musically, [arranging] is part of the fun ... it's what helps make the day special," Sicard says. "Everybody wants their wedding to be remembered, and performing a song you wouldn't imagine a string band doing can really add to that."

The band's fans include Jodie Giordano, who danced to a downhome rendition of "Rainbow Connection" at her recent reception: "I never dreamed about my wedding day as a kid, but I've known since I was little that it would be Dad's and my song, so that meant a ton," she explains. Having taken banjo lessons for a few years herself, she even stepped in to play an Irish waltz during the reception at Stonehurst in Waltham. Her husband, Mike, is a professional guitarist, so it was important for them to incorporate live music without overpowering the intimate estate.

That's one of the benefits to playing bluegrass, according to Sicard—there's little to no amplification needed. "There's something very clean and pure about seeing musicians who aren't attached to a bunch of cables and amps," he says. "We're all so connected to technology in our day-to-day lives, and for a day when you're celebrating love, there's a strong desire to step away from all of that and embrace what really matters to people and what is real."

It's one of the reasons the band loves playing "rustic" places, like barns and waterside venues. "It's great that young couples are embracing traditional acoustic American music and seem to be more focused on the gathering than the glamour," says vocalist and multi-instrumentalist Alley Stoetzel.

The barn wedding trend isn't the only boon for business—artists like the Avett Brothers, the Lumineers and Mumford & Sons are drawing new fans to the genre. Old Crow Medicine Show's "Wagon Wheel" ranks among the band's favorite reception songs. "We refer to it as the 'Free Bird' of bluegrass, because it's requested all of the time," Stoetzel says. "Even though we've played it a thousand times, it's always a blast."

Protege

The band name Protege is an apt one for Leah Randazzo Schulman and Jeff D'Antona—after all, the vocalist and piano player met when he was teaching her the keys. They soon took the relationship from professional to romantic, tying the knot two years ago. Today they harmonize with their seven-piece band, and they say that having a married couple in Protege puts engaged couples at ease. "The reaction is always very sweet," Schulman says. When one bride was worried the band wouldn't fit on a small stage, she said, " 'Well, you can just lounge right on the piano.' Of course, I didn't, but it was a cute idea."

The Fabulous Baker Boys notion wouldn't be that off-key, as both she and Jeff have original jazz projects in the works. While some couples encourage them to play their originals, Schulman says they always enjoy performing upbeat covers. Besides "Happy" by Pharrell and "Dynamite" by Taio Cruz—which she calls the "wedding standard of our generation"—they also mix it up with '90s R&B like Mary J. Blige, Aaliyah and Montell Jordan. "Our generation are the ones getting married right now, and they grew up with that stuff on the radio just like we did!"

Crowd-pleasers like those win Protege attention at live showcases organized by their booking agent, Wilson Stevens Productions, where engaged couples can check out bands over dinner or drinks. For their own reception, Schulman and D'Antona celebrated at Indian Hill Music Center in Littleton, where her mother is the executive director. Instead of a first dance, they did a "first song"—Bob Dylan's "Make You Feel My Love"—and the reception turned into a giant jam session, with friends and family performing along with them. It's a vibe Jeff and Leah have come to know well: Since they've known most of the members of Protege (including Jon Bean, Sturgis Cunningham, Paul Chase, John Munro and Will Stevens) for years, the wedding band itself, they say, is like an extended family.

Maestro Musicians

A garden wedding ceremony with classical music may sound like the most traditional of affairs. But when the toast is raised to several newly wedded couples simultaneously—and made not with Champagne, but with Brewlywed Ale from Sam Adams—the occasion is anything but. "It's really exciting to be a part of it... it's this raw energy," says Daniel Broniatowski of Maestro Musicians. "A justice of the peace comes and does the marriages, but there are also spontaneous proposals that happen while we're playing in the hops garden."

The string quartet counts Boston Beer Company's "eat, drink and be married" event among their most unique gigs yet, but they're down to play just about anything, anywhere. Maestro Musicians' repertoire includes jazz, tango and pop songs like Coldplay's "Viva la Vida." "Stuff like that sounds really good with stringed instruments—people would not expect that normally," Broniatowski says. One couple attending another's wedding was so inspired by the Maestros' arrangement of Leonard Cohen's "Hallelujah" that they reached out about hiring the band for their big day. The quartet is also one of the few local groups to specialize in Jewish folk and klezmer music for weddings.

Of course, with members whose pedigrees include New England Conservatory, Boston University, Oberlin and European academies, they can also help couples without musical backgrounds welcome classical sounds into their ceremony, reception or cocktail hour. "We are skilled at helping them choose the music, so it's extra-personal and special," Broniatowski says. "We guide them so they feel comfortable and confident, so they know the music is tailored to their personalities."

As for the most common wedding processional—"Canon in D" by Pachelbel—Broniatowski laughs when asked if he's sick of playing it. "It's one of those pieces where you love it or hate it. Some musicians do, but I personally love it," he says. "Classical music speaks strictly to the heart. It's music that crosses all boundaries and cultures. It may sound cheesy, but it's a life event, and we make a difference in lives through music. It's the best form of communication possible." ◆

featured on page 50

"Don't be afraid to mix styles, like we did here!" Courtney Hurley says of this setting, which mixes gold and silver, modern and rustic, inviting Mother Nature to the table with a faux grass runner. "Many of our items, including the 8-foot ellipse table we chose, are handcrafted in-house."

"Louis square-back chairs are perfect to add a touch of vintage flair."

RUSTIC ROMANCE

New England Country Rentals got its start four years ago, when owners Kelly and Matej Ucen were preparing for their big day. They wanted a family-style reception, but couldn't find the long farm tables they had in mind—so they built 22 of their own. Now the company offers a range of rentals, from furniture and flatware to linens and even a mobile kitchen. And it's grown to include marketing director Courtney Hurley, who gave us the deets on this design.

TAKE THE FALL

"I love love, and I have a passion for simple, organic design," says Lauren Wells, who left a career in advertising last year to found South Boston design and styling company Lauren Wells Events. Here, with help from Roslindale's Pollen Floral Design, she plays with fall's lush hues. "Paler palettes have been popular over the past few seasons, but I love to embrace the richer, more jewel-toned colors as well, especially in the colder seasons."

"Taper candles are such an elegant detail, if the venue allows. If not, be sure to use votive or tealight s instead. Candlelight is so important for creating warmth around the table."

"Using fresh fruit in arrangements and cocktails is an easy way to bring in some seasonal flavors and textures."

WHITE HOT

Having founded Tangorra Wedding Planning more than a decade ago, Linnea Tangorra has worked her magic on many varied venues—so here, she chose to stake out neutral territory. "I wanted to stay neutral so that the style and ideas would not only be aesthetically pleasing to a lot of viewers, but translate well in most venues," she explains. Working from her studios on Newbury Street and in Newburyport, she tapped Newton's Table Toppers for linens and chairs and Boston's Spruce Floral for flowers, creating a design with modern lines and inviting textures.

SPRUCE FLORAL (617-989-1910) SPRUCEFLORAL.COM

"White is a very popular color for floral right now, combined with pops of silver and sparkle."

"The idea behind the whole design was to try to 'marry' two very different looks into one tablescape," Linnea Tangorra explains. "So many of our couples define themselves as either swaying toward a textural and 'fluffy' look or toward a modern, clean-lined look. Rarely do we see these two looks together. I wanted to show people that it is possible to use a lush, fluffy linen with clean, modern flowers."

"Mercury glass is something that is very popular and lends itself so well to a variety of designs.... It also reflects beautiful candlelight."

"This menu card design is a modern take on a toile concept," Lo McShay explains. "We commissioned a toile designer to create a custom pattern to tell the love story of our bride and groom. Local stationer Lynn Graham brought the design to life." As for the gold goodies? "We've been eyeing this modern brushed gold flatware," says McShay, whose rental partner, Peterson Party Center, recently added the style to the inventory.

PREP SCHOOLED

For this spread, Lo McShay of Cambridge's LoLo Event Design updated one of her favorite creations from the fall wedding season. "We were inspired by the vibrant color combinations of the venue," McShay says, "which lead us to a Royal Tenenbaums meets Bordeaux design approach—or as I nicknamed it, 'eclectic preppy.'"

"The candelabras add a level of formality to the table and create height within the space. We painted them powder blue and finished with gold candles for a whimsical touch."

"We always recommend finding an element you can mix and match to make the design more approachable. The emerald-green wine glass and purple wine goblet add to the color of the table, while the gold-rimmed Champagne flute keeps the right level of formality."

Cats are ready for a close-up

From Grumpy Cat to Lil Bub, Henri Le Chat Noir to Nyan Cat, one thing is clear: The kittehs are officially killing it on the Internet. Our feline friends may not give a damn about us, but we humans are certainly obsessed with them—and when it comes to the fractious mess of clickbait and comment thread battles known as the World Wide Web, cat videos are the great equalizer. So it's no surprise that there is now an entire festival dedicated to this genre of cinema. On Halloween eve, cat lovers can sit back and watch 70 straight minutes of kitty-centric YouTube videos, Vines and short films at the 2014 Internet Cat Video Festival, a feline film fest curated by Minneapolis' Walker Art Center, now in its second year. Billed as the "first offline celebration of online cat videos," the festival inspired last year's Copy Cat film fest in Somerville and features an all-star cast of eats. To see them on the big screen, prowl on down to the Berklee Performance Center on Oct. 30. / Alexandra Cavallo

THE 2014 INTERNET CAT VIDEO FESTIVAL screens on Oct 30 at 6:30 and 9 pm at the Berklee Performance Center, 136 Mass Ave, Boston. $12. berklee.edu.

THROUGH THE LOOKING GLASS

And you thought your houseguests were bad. A headless lion tamer and a flaming skeleton are just two of the new roomies the Zorba family discovers when they inherit their uncle's house—and his ghost-viewing goggles—in William Castle's 1960 thriller 13 Ghosts. The film that spawned a 2001 remake even stars a real wicked witch (of the West, that is): Margaret Hamilton, who plays a possibly satanic housekeeper. Just as at the original screenings, audience members this Halloween get to don glasses that illuminate the ghosts in all their ectoplasmic glory. The haunting begins at the Brattle Theatre on Oct. 30. / Elizabeth Isenberg

Reviews by Brett Michel

Birdman or (The Unexpected Virtue of Ignorance) ★★★ There's a gimmick in this new tour de force from Alejandro González Iñárritu, but it's not what you're thinking. Sure, Michael Keaton is terrifically ironic as Riggan Thomson—aka Birdman, a nod to his time as Batman more than two decades ago—a washed-up actor attempting a "serious" comeback on Broadway by writing, directing and starring in an ill-advised adaptation of Raymond Carver stories. No, it's the single-take illusion that Iñárritu and cinematographer Emmanuel Lubezki employ when it serves little dramatic purpose, especially given the amount of time compression (the movie is set during the course of about a week). Lubczki won an Oscar for the same trick in Alfonso Cuaron's Gravity, and initially it seems to fit the backstage feel, as if we're watching a play within a play—but moving outside the theater, the technique is a scream for attention. That's a shame, given the nice work by Edward Norton as the stage star who tries to overtake Riggan's production, an understated Zach Galifianakis as Riggan's friend and producer, and Emma Stone out-acting everyone as Riggan's assistant. She's also the possibly schizophrenic actor's recovering addict daughter, who falls for her father's nemesis. Yeah, the script's the weakest part. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

The Boxtrolls ★★★ Based on Alan Snow's children's novel Here Be Monsters!, this latest handcrafted marvel from the stop-motion animators at Laika studios is a darkly twisted look at the goings-on of the incredibly expressive inhabitants of Cheesebridge and their quirky underground counterparts: cave-dwelling trash collectors known as Boxtrolls. Mischievous creatures, they've raised an orphaned human boy named Eggs (voiced by Game of Thrones' Isaac Hempstead-Wright), a pawn in a convoluted plot hatched by the town's Mr. Creosote-like exterminator, Archibald Snatcher (Academy Award winner Ben Kingsley), to rid the land of these misunderstood, gibberish-spewing "monsters." How exactly Eggs has developed his Queen's English vocabulary is a mystery best not contemplated. Be sure to stay during the end credits for a behind-the-curtain look at some of the film's production art, plus a wonderfully self-referential sequence contemplating the existential link between the characters and their creators; if the rest of the movie had been half as clever, this might have stood as a worthy successor to Laika's ParaNorman and Coraline. As is, directors Anthony Stacchi and Graham Annable have created something that's merely better than most live-action productions. What nerve! (At Boston Common, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

The Equalizer ★★★ Your parents may have been fans of The Equalizer, the 1985-89 CBS series starring British actor Edward Woodward as a 60-something retired agent-turned-private detective, an avenging angel helping to equalize the odds against the downtrodden. But you might think twice about taking them to this excessively violent film that serves as the TV show's prequel, transplanting the action from the mean streets of New York to the meaner streets of Boston. Robert McCall, the stuffy suit- and overcoat-wearing Brit, has been reimagined as, well, Denzel Washington, an everyman-with-a-past who manages a Home Depot-like warehouse store that you just know will serve as the perfect location for an extended, bloody shootout. When McCall meets Teri (Chloë Grace Moretz), an underage prostitute controlled by Russian gangsters (led by Marton Csokas in a terrifically scene-chewing turn), he can idle no longer. Slickly helmed by Antoine Fuqua (who directed Washington in his Oscar-winning role in 2001's Training Day), this completely ridiculous entertainment even grants its star Terminator-like eagle vision. Your folks can keep their small-screen Equalizer; this big-screen update is a brutal blast. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Fury ★★★ The latest work of nonstop brutality from writer/director David Ayer (End of Watch) begins with a lone figure emerging from the distance on horseback, an homage to the most famous shot in Lawrence of Arabia. David Lean's movie is a major work of art dealing with a complex man conflicted by his loyalties and the blood on his hands, while Ayer's, well, is not. It's macho porn, anchored by strong ensemble work (Brad Pitt, Shia LaBeouf and Logan Lerman star). It's also a feature-length merging of the unflinching assault on Normandy in Steven Spielberg's Saving Private Ryan with the violent climax of Sam Peckinpah's The Wild Bunch, a film Ayer had planned on remaking. However, between this movie and Sabotage, he's cribbed enough from Peckinpah's masterpiece that a remake would be redundant, much like this film, which stresses—again and again—the old trope that War Is Hell. It's 1945; Pitt's Sgt. Don "Wardaddy" Collier pulls the Nazi officer in the opening scene from his horse, stabbing the German repeatedly through his eye socket, before rejoining his five-man tank crew on their blood-soaked mission with destiny. Those with weak stomachs might want to skip the popcorn. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Gone Girl ★★1/2 Directed by David Fincher at his most coldly clinical, this wildly anticipated adaptation of the global bestseller by Gillian Flynn is faithful to a fault, lacking the lurid humor that would enliven such a potboiler. A handsome actor the media loves to hate, Ben Affleck is well cast as Nick Dunne, a man who's suspected of foul play when his seemingly perfect wife, Amy (Rosamund Pike), goes missing on the morning of their fifth wedding anniversary. Flynn adapted her own book for the screenplay, and while her material remains playful and increasingly ridiculous, it grows more and more tedious once the story opens up its secrets in the second hour and the fun drains out of the proceedings. This is the type of did-he-or-didn't-he movie that Michael Douglas used to star in as a matter of course—and Fincher even had success making one of these vehicles with Douglas when he directed 1997's The Game—but like Flynn's book, this film falters in its second half. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Assembly Row, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Judge ★1/2 Hank Palmer (Robert Downey Jr.) is standing at a urinal inside a Chicago courthouse when prosecutor Mike Kattan (David Krumholtz) storms in. Turning to face his opposition, Hank continues relieving himself. Soiled but undeterred, Mike demands to know how it feels to only represent people who are guilty. "Let me finish that cliche for you," Hank replies. "They're the only ones who can afford me." If only the cliches had ended there. Alas, the predictable formulas at play are made only slightly more palatable by Downey's acidic wit. Traveling home to Indiana after his mother suddenly dies, Hank must reluctantly defend his estranged father (played by Robert Duvall)—known simply as "Judge" to everyone in the community for his decades on the bench—when the arbiter is arrested after the funeral on suspicion of vehicular manslaughter... and possibly murder. Comedy director David Dobkin dives into dramatic territory here, but his heavy-handed examination of father/son relations belly-flops, ending up largely laughable. Between the diapers in his last picture, The Change-Up, and the incontinence here, he mostly excels when directing actors to bond over poop—or pee. Either way, it's a shitty, predictable business. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Kill the Messenger ★★1/2 Like The Parallax View by way of All the President's Men, Michael Cuesta's look at the troubled life of Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist Gary Webb doesn't hit the heights of either of those Alan J. Pakula classics, although the fact-based script by investigative journalist Peter Landesman does raise a lot of troubling questions—as did Webb, before he was discredited and driven to suicide. Based on Webb's book Dark Alliance and Nick Schou's book Kill the Messenger, the film features two-time Oscar nominee Jeremy Renner in another fiery performance as Webb, who exposed the CIA's role in arming Contra rebels in Nicaragua and its troubling complicity in allowing crack cocaine into California communities, before becoming the target of a vicious smear campaign for his troubles. Despite warnings from drug kingpins and CIA operatives alike, Webb kept digging as his professional and personal life unraveled. Rosemarie DeWitt is excellent as Webb's long-suffering wife (get this woman a lead role, stat!), but the domestic scenes ultimately detract from the larger story being told, that of a man destroyed for seeking the truth. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Listen Up Philip ★★★ Writer/director Alex Ross Perry is one to watch. His latest film, however, might not be. Depending on your tolerance for wholly unlikable assholes, you might steer clear of Philip Lewis Friedman (Jason Schwartzman), whose second novel is about to be panned in the Times. And he doesn't care. No one reads them anymore, anyway. (But does anyone read books?) He'll do everything he can to make you dislike him, then excuse himself with "I know, what an asshole." That includes picking up a girl nearly half his age—so what if he lives with his girlfriend, Ashley Kane (Elisabeth Moss), a photographer who supports him? OK, so Philip's surname might as well be Roth—if that role weren't already filled by his idol and new mentor, Ike Zimmerman (Jonathan Pryce). Perry's narrative even feels like it emerged from Roth's fingers, with its digressions for chapter-long stretches to focus on Ashley (in the present and in flashback) or on Ike, with Eric Bogosian narrating in Roth-like tones. Perry's last picture, The Color Wheel, was a masterpiece in miniature, while this is more ambitious. Not as successful maybe, but then, who needs to be liked? (At the Museum of Fine Arts.)

Love Is Strange ★★★1/2 In this compassionate portrait of the hardships faced by a couple finally married after nearly four decades together, John Lithgow and Alfred Molina bring real tenderness to their roles as Ben and George, a septuagenarian painter and a slightly younger music teacher at a Manhattan Catholic school. Rapidly, the two discover the meaning of "for better or worse." George is fired as a result of their union, forcing the two to sell the apartment they've shared for almost 20 years. Worse, they must live apart until they can find an affordable home. George moves in with a couple of NYPD officers (Manny Perez and Cheyenne Jackson) who live in their tenement, while Ben is taken in by his nephew (Darren Burrows) and his wife (Marisa Tomei), sharing a bunk bed with their territorial teenage son (Charlie Tahan). Separation takes its toll on the couple, and Lithgow is particularly fine as he quietly communicates his creeping realization that he's become a burden. Never dipping wholly into melodrama, this heartbreaker from director Ira Sachs casts its spell gradually, like the delicate Chopin that serves as the soundtrack. Lovely. (At West Newton.)

Men, Women & Children ★ From the floating graphics popping up above characters' heads to Emma Thompson's narration, this could be a sequel to 2006's Stranger Than Fiction, but one of those films was enough, thank you very much. Jason Reitman's alarmist picture about the evils of the Internet and the dangers of disconnection might stand as the worst picture of the year if Reitman hadn't already earned that distinction when he delivered Labor Day to audiences this past winter. This overreaching, pompous movie literally reaches for the stars, opening on a shot of the Voyager space probe as it leaves our solar system—before coming down to earth as Adam Sandler's neck-bearded everyman, Don Truby, settles in front of his 15-year-old son's computer to masturbate. The comedian's character is part of a large ensemble of interconnected parents and teenagers who attempt to navigate issues such as infidelity, fame hunting, anorexia and video game culture. "In all our cosmos," intones Thompson, a la Carl Sagan, "there is no hint that anyone will come and save us from ourselves." Or from this movie. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Pride ★★★ If theater director Matthew Warchus' film only relied on the laughs mined from buttoned-up British thespian Imelda Staunton asking hilariously candid questions about homosexuality, it'd be worth a recommendation. But actor and first-time writer Stephen Beresford's shamelessly manipulative script also includes enough kitchen-sink realism to earn its tears. An earnest crowd-pleaser that avoids veering completely into sentimentality, the film relates the true events surrounding the 1984 formation of a London-based group of gay and lesbian activists who raised money to support the striking National Union of mineworkers and their families in the Welsh countryside. It features a wonderful cast, including Bill Nighy as a shy veteran miner, Paddy Considine as the union rep who welcomes the group to a town that initially doesn't know what to make of their new friends, and Dominic West as one of the first men in the U.K. to be diagnosed with HIV. Margaret Thatcher's England was a tough place for many, but these two groups of unlikely bedfellows discovered that standing together made for the strongest union of all. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Skeleton Twins ★★★ Recognizing that there's often an air of sadness to former Saturday Night Live player Kristen Wiig's performances, director Craig Johnson and his co-writer, Mark Heyman, fashioned this comic drama involving chronic depression around the actress's hilariously melancholy talents. When we first see Wiig's Maggie, she's about to swallow a fistful of pills, but she's stopped by a phone call informing her that her fraternal twin, Milo (Wiig's longtime SNL cast mate Bill Hader)—a self-described "tragic gay cliche"—has just attempted to end his life. It would be easy to dismiss Hader's performance as a feature-length version of his "Stefon" character, but there's a depth to Milo that cuts deeper than the slits he's carved into his wrists. Nevertheless, some of Stefon's gleefully warped sensibility surfaces in Milo's suicide note, which reads, "To whom it may concern: see ya later," punctuated with a smiley face. And really, that about sums up the film's formula; it goes into some dark corners, but it always emerges in a happier place. As much as Milo and Maggie try to sabotage everything good and stable, it's their laughter that guides them—and us—through. (At Coolidge Corner and Somerville.)

St. Vincent ★★1/2 Bill Murray's a national treasure, and he's reliably great as Vincent, the hedonistic, misanthropic curmudgeon in Theodore Melfi's coming-of-age tale, where he becomes the unlikely mentor to Oliver (Jaeden Lieberher), a polite 12-year-old who's just moved in next door with his single mother, Maggie (Melissa McCarthy). But let's face it: Remove Murray from the film and you're left with sentimental formula. Nevertheless, Murray elevates the formula tremendously, and he has a real chemistry with newcomer Lieberher. Remarkably, McCarthy plays the material straight, dialing her notable comic instincts way down as a put-upon mom barely holding things together. Likewise, Naomi Watts plays well against type as a rundown, pregnant Russian hooker named Daka, who accompanies Vincent and his young charge as they go about the retired war veteran's daily routine at the race track, the local dive bar and the strip club where Daka works despite her baby bump. Not quite the saint of the title, Vincent's a good man nevertheless. But would you let this drunk babysit your kid? (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

middle-of-the-road style to a movie that demanded so much more. Jonathan Tropper adapted the screenplay from his well-regarded novel, and the ensemble cast is certainly an asset (Jason Bateman, Tina Fey, Adam Driver and Corey Stoll play the children of Jane Fonda's matriarch). But Levy plays everything too broad, never finding a dramatic tone to ground all the comic beats; that's not terribly surprising, as he's best known for the Night at the Museum movies. Bateman is terrific as protagonist Judd Altman—as is Driver as family antagonist Phillip—but Fey's dramatic chops still have a way to go. Sure, she sheds quite a few tears, but her anguish wouldn't be any more believable if she were playing a crocodile. The siblings have gathered to fulfill their father's dying wish and sit shiva. He was an atheist, mind you. OK, so the plot exists simply to get these disparate people together. The one thing they share? Their distaste for their mother's new boobs. And for this alone, Fonda deserves to win a good sport award. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Tracks ★★★1/2 "It seems to me the universe gave us three gifts to make life bearable—hope, jokes and dogs," muses Robyn Davidson (Alice in Wonderland's talented Mia Wasikowska) in John Curran's handsome true-life travelogue. "But the greatest of these gifts," she concludes, "was dogs." Indeed, the spare script—adapted from Davidson's 1980 memoir and her popular 1978 cover story for National Geographic—finds the willowy Australian arriving in dusty Alice Springs with nothing but her beloved black Labrador, Diggity. Tired of both city life and her country's class system, she's planning a 2,000-mile trek across the Outback, accompanied by her dog and a quartet of camels who increasingly become more like 4,000-pound versions of her canine companion. "I think you have a problem with people," observes Rick Smolan (Adam Driver of HBO's Girls), a talkative American photographing her journey for National Geographic as a condition of the magazine's sponsorship, even if her voyage was spawned by a desire to be alone. The widescreen cinematography, captured on film and inspired by Smolan's photographs, demands to be seen on the big screen; catch this one in the theater if you can. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

BLACK JACK A loss of one sense is said to heighten those that remain. Sueh is the case when the JACK Quartet turns off the lights to perform Georg Friedrieh Haas' "In iij. Noet.," a hypnotic work meant to be experieneed entirely in the dark. Using memory, intuition and sonic eues hidden in the seore, the four musicians surround the audience with soft, eerie harmonies and explosive chords. Haas believes the experienee allows listeners to break the link between sight and sound and embrace what ean be heard and felt in the dark. Nyctophobes, beware. The rest of us ean see—well, hear—the talented group at the Institute of Contemporary Art on Nov. 8. / Kim Lester

Edited by Sarah Hagman

SNEAK PEAK Scaling the world's mountain ranges is a tall enough order—try lugging a 53-pound camera along. That was all part of a day's work for mountaineer Bradford Washburn, founder and longtime director of Boston's Museum of Science, whose passion for photography and cartography took him to new heights. Washburn topped the Matterhorn, Denali and the Alps, and though he never reached the summit of Mount Everest, he spearheaded the most accurate measuring of the mountaintop—at the age of 89. His black-and-white large-scale contact prints (many taken at angles perilous enough to bring about altitude sickness while on level ground) are on view in Bradford Washburn: Vintage Photographs at Panopticon Gallery through Jan. 13. / Sarah Hagman

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

High school reunions are generally terrifying prospects, ranking on the reunion spectrum somewhere above family picnics and below boy band tours. That is, unless you're Amy Poehler. This month, the Burlington native and BC alum heads back to the Bay State, where she'll share a stage with her high school English teacher. The pair will discuss the Parks and Rec star's first book, Yes Please, which mixes memoir with advice as Pochler covers topics ranging from her summer job scooping ice cream to her work at SNL. Say "Yes, please" to her appearance at the Back Bay Events Center on Oct. 29. / Meghan Kavanaugh

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu featurcs honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

FROM LATVIA WITH LOVE

It wasn't just opening night; it was the start of a new era. Accordingly, the Boston Symphony Orchestra pulled out all the stops to welcome new music director Andris Nelsons at Fanfare, a gala dinner dance that attracted every boldfaced big shot in Boston, and more than a few from farther afield.

Among the all-star cast: board chair Bill Achtmeyer and the show-stopping Alli, the swanlike Maria Stata with her brilliant husband, Ray, Cambridge art collector Susan Paine, Chestnut Hillions Larry and Roberta Cohn, uber-philanthropists John and Diddy Cullinane, the bedazzling Susan Kaplan, real estate mack daddy Ron Druker with his other half, Julie, MFA grand poobah Malcolm Rogers, stalwart supporters Carmine and Beth Martignetti, major arts patrons Paul and Katie Buttenwieser, the ultra-chic Barbara Hostetter with her handsome other half, Amos, brunette bombshell Evelyn Treacy and her swashbuckling husband, Michael, and so on and so forth.

The food, by New York chef Daniel Boulud and his Boston cohort Aaron Chambers, was superb, as was the fanfare composed for the occasion by John Williams. Coffee and dessert were followed by dancing to the Boston Pops Swing Orchestra under the baton of society bandleader Bo Winiker. However, the highlight of the evening was undoubtedly the standing ovation given to Nelsons as he officially took over as the 15th conductor in the orchestra's history.

The evening's funniest exchange: One man said, "Liquor just doesn't taste good to me lately, which must be a sign of something," to which his friend replied, "Yes. Probably Armageddon."

FOOD, GLORIOUS FOOD

Whoever said too many cooks spoil the soup never attended Men of Boston Cook for Women's Health.

Held underneath a gigantic tent, the annual fundraiser for the Codman Square Health Center pairs area chefs and with local nabobs like smiley news anchor Jonathan Elias, singer/songwriter Livingston Taylor, Celtics giant Walter McCarty, zoolander John Linehan, Channel 5 head honcho Bill Fine and some guy named Marty Walsh who posed for a lot of selfies and seemed to know everybody in the room.

Also on hand: environmental activist Erica Mattison, the absurdly attractive Tremayne Youmans, accidental hipster Marquis Thomas, the uber-stylish Porsha Olayiwola, dashing Bangladeshi Solmon Chowdhury, power player Sam Chambers, UMass muckety muck Phil Carver, and Dot daddies Kevin and Barry Barry (who happily opted to take his husband's surname).

Not to brag, but the lobster bisque from Abby Park ladled out by yours truly was wildly popular, prompting one guest to say, "It's not kosher, but it's damn good, and it'll give me something to atone for on Yom Kippur." Meanwhile, a gorgeous young lady in a form-fitting dress provoked another woman to say, "I'm not sure what she's doing here. She's obviously never even looked at food."

BEST OF ALL, NO ONE USED THE WORD "UMAMI"

One of fall's most finger-lickin' good events is Taste of Perkins, an evening of nibbling, sipping and merry-making to benefit the Perkins School for the Blind. Held in the gothic splendor of the Howe Building, the party features a killer silent auction (who wouldn't want a drone?), live music by Perkins students and a blindfolded food and wine tasting, not to mention a scintillating guest list.

To name but a few: new board chair Corinne Grousbeck, the incorrigible Benson Willis and his long-suffering other half, Dan Avery, party barometer Shane Merriweather and the toothsome Katie Hendricks, musical impresario Ralph Jaccodine, Wellesley party pair Laurel and Michael Schnitman, hotelier extraordinaire Alex Attia and one guest who said, "My real name is Verlan," to which another replied, "Sounds like an STD."

However, the evening's best exchange happened when someone offered the marital advice "It's better to ask for forgiveness than beg for permission," to which the receiver said, "Yeah. The problem is... I do a lotta begging." ◆

INDULGE YOURSELF

I HAD MY FIRST TRUE TASTE OF LUXURY at age 12. We spent six months of that year in a house on the South Shore, and my room had its own little adjoining bathroom, decorated in cheery blue and white. That was the first and only time I've had a bathroom entirely to myself, and to me it was as precious as Delft porcelain—not only because I'm a lover of long showers, but because when you're getting ready for a middle school dance, experimenting with lip gloss and hot-pink crushed velvet (oof), privacy is priceless.

Needless to say, everyone defines luxury differently. So for our Luxury issue, we tapped some experts on caviar, high fashion, fine art, yachts and more for their own ideas about luxury, not to mention behind-the-scenes stories and tips. Elsewhere, Matt Martinelli takes a look at Boston's recent bumper crop of luxury apartments, and Jonathan Soroff interviews Fox Sports anchor and BC alum Molly McGrath, who was game for a very glam photo shoot off the field. Sarah Hagman sips a $33 cocktail, while Knoefel Longest offers a taste of Skinner's Fine Wines auction. If wine's not your thing, how about some camel milk vodka? Alexandra Cavallo chats with Southie native Jack Maxwell about that and his new Travel Channel show, featuring drinkable delicacies around the world. Meanwhile, Meghan Kavanaugh tracks down some small dishes with big price tags around town, and MC Slim JB reviews a neighborhood gem where you can eat like a king on the cheap—proving that indulgences come in many forms. So go ahead: Enjoy a few that feel special to you.

Imperatives

MR. MAYOR

IT'S IMPOSSIBLE TO IMAGINE A MAN with less pretense than Tom Menino. In his record-setting 20-year tenure as mayor of Boston, we watched him negotiate every imaginable social setting, from dining with royalty to being kissed by a drag queen, and regardless of the situation, he unwaveringly remained "a guy from Hyde Park," which is how he preferred people to think of him. When he took office in 1993, pundits predicted he'd only last until the next election, and they had to eat their words for the next two decades as he made historic strides in improving education, equality, the environment and almost every other aspect of life in this city. His accent, for which he was endlessly lampooned, was a point of pride, because it proved where he was from—something he was careful never to forget. His accomplishments were legion, the sense of loss at his passing profound. Rest in peace, Mr. Mayor. Your affection for Boston is matched only by Boston's affection for you. / Jonathan Soroff

MAYOR THOMAS M. MENINO (1942–2014)

Kings of Their Castles

Boston's seen a boom in high-rise luxury apartments, with more than 1,500 units arriving on the market in the past year alone, many boasting amenities like yoga studios, bocce courts and outdoor pools. But what's truly luxurious? Being the first person to play with all those toys. Just ask Tony Winters, who moved into Waterside Place with his wife and four kids, ages 6 to 11. They had the 20-story building in the Seaport all to themselves for two weeks.

"We were the first tenants in on Feb. 1. It was pretty cool," Winters recalls. "Obviously what gives the building life is having people in it, but at the same time it was nice when my kids could run up and down the halls playing tag because they knew nobody was going to bother them—and I certainly wasn't going to stop them."

For Adrian Lagrama, one of the first residents at the Arlington in Bay Village, his early arrival meant having staff members seemingly at his beck and call, like a small army of personal assistants. "The staff is really attentive. There was a dog walker I was interviewing, and I had a bad feeling about her when I first met her. Then I talked to the staff and said, 'Hey, when this person walked the dog, what did you think?' And they gave me honest feedback, and actually recommended me to some other dog walker," Lagrama says. "I almost felt like, since I didn't have any family in Boston, they were always looking out for me."

Being the first person in also means you get first pick of the units. Manny Chan, who was one of the first residents to move into the Radian on Aug. 1, chose a quiet spot close to the ground level in the downtown building. But getting first pick in the garage was almost as important: "I walked in, and they said any spot other than the handicap spots, I could have my pick from," he says. "I have a bigger car, so having first dibs was critical for me."

Chan found just one downside to being first: You can't pull the old "the previous tenant did this" line. When he noticed some scuffs on the floor that weren't from him, he quickly emailed the property manager to make sure he wouldn't get penalized. Of course, the manager sent someone up to fix it within 30 minutes.

As Winters dryly notes of the Waterside staff, "If we needed something, there was always someone there, since they weren't doing much else."

The staff is still there for Winters whenever he needs them, an upside of having first fostered relationships when his family was the only one living in the 342,000-square-foot building. He's got only one gripe. While his dog's been treated like royalty, and she had the run of the place for weeks, she's still missing one particular perk. "She's never been pet of the month," Winters muses. Even when there was no competition, she still came up short. / Matt Martinelli

Boston's boom in luxury apartments means competition for renters. Here's a look at the amenities some newcomers have used to set themselves apart.

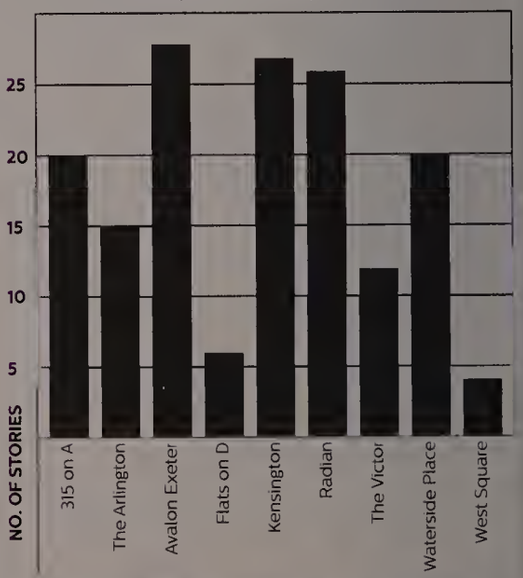
PET PAMPERING

Forget just being pet friendly. Pet spas are available at the Kensington, West Square and the Arlington.

POOL PARTY

Outdoor common space is available at most luxury apartments, but the Kensington is the only new one in Boston that offers an outdoor pool.

COURTING COMPETITION



The Victor and the Arlington both boast basketball courts.

MARK YOUR CALENDAR

New openings slated for the next 12 months include...

Troy Boston, 378 units
100 Pier 4, 369 units
Watermark Seaport, 300 units

They'll join these luxury apartment buildings, all opened since Sept. 2013.

832

Number of units estimated for One Seaport Square, which breaks ground this month and is expected to be the largest of the new crop of luxury apartment buildings when it opens with 740,000 square feet in 2016.

RED ALERT

HOT OPENINGS, NEAR AND FAR

IF YOU'VE HAD A LINGERING CRAVING FOR CHEF Steve Johnson's signature dishes since he closed Rendezvous in Cambridge, you'll be happy to know the man behind that Moroccan spiced chicken and the lemon buttermilk pudding will soon be back in business. The only hitch? You'll have to drive a bit farther. By the beginning of December, the Red Dory will be open in Tiverton, Rhode Island, just south of the Sakonnet River Bridge on Route 24, on the way to Newport.

"Everything's coming together really nicely," Johnson says. The cured salmon with lovage, sumac and preserved lemon offers clues about the Red Dory menu's orientation: mostly Mediterranean-inspired seafood dishes, using ingredients from local farms and fishermen. In addition to grilled sardines and crowd-pleasers such as lobster and corn fritters, starters will include skillet-roasted head-on shrimp with chili oil and lime. Pastas range from rotelle with tuna ragu to classic linguine with red clam sauce. Main courses of fish top out at $25, in line with the restaurant's "casual fine dining" category. In the dining room, where customers can enjoy a fireplace and views of the Sakonnet River, the Rendezvous tradition of designated nightly specials will continue: Wednesdays feature Moroccan spiced chicken, Fridays feature paella and Sundays are all-day tapas extravaganzas. Best of all, the lemon buttermilk pudding is on the dessert list.

Tasty Bits

CLOSER TO BOSTON, BESITO HAS opened its second Massachusetts location at the Mall at Chestnut Hill. Although it may be too late to enjoy the seasonal patio, you'll still be able to savor specials such as Tacos Mar y Tierra (scallops, shrimp and pork in pineapple and guajillo chile marinade with melted Chihuahua cheese) or Bisteco Jaiba (crab-crusted NY strip steak over mole con crema and wilted chard).

The latest on the upcoming Cambridge restaurant from Susan Regis and Rene Becker, now dubbed Shepard: "We're looking at an early 2015 opening," says Regis, who's now "firing on all cylinders" after some delays. And another restaurant originally slated to open in November, Woods Hill Table in Concord, is now set for a January debut.

BESITO TIMES TWO: Besito opened its second Bay State location.

THAT'S AMORE: A love of Italian food and wine fueled the new Centre Street Cafe concept.

CENTRE STAGE

A JP FAVE STRADDLES THE LINE BETWEEN NEW AND OLD.

THERE ARE PLENTY OF CHANGES TO THE recently reopened Centre Street Cafe in Jamaica Plain. There's the new dinner menu: Italian. The new owners: the Tres Gatos team. The new executive chef: Brian Rae, an alum of Rialto. The redone interior: dark hardwood floors, exposed Edison-style light bulbs and white walls adorned with Italian tile and pressed tin. But the first question that worried passers-by ask is "Will Marc be there?"

Fear not, as the changes to the 34-seat spot don't extend to the waiter who's been greeting customers for 17 years—or to the rest of the service staff, for that matter. And co-owners Keith Harmon, David Doyle and Maricely Perez-Alers knew not to mess with brunch, either.

"We really wanted to have it continue to be an American-style, diner-style brunch. That's what was popular here. And we don't feel the need to deviate strongly from that. It will be the basics of pancakes and waffles," Doyle says. "Our hearts are really with the dinner menu, but we're also serious breakfast, brunch, lunch fans."

While customers will be comforted by the familiar truck-stop breakfast on the menu, the dinner atmosphere and cuisine will be drastically different. The music will turn down, the lights will dim and Italian cuisine will fill the plates. Rae's menu of shareable dishes is split into four sections: snacks (cicchetti) such as figs and grapes with ricotta, starters (medio) such as swordfish belly conserva with sunchokes and black olives, pasta such as lasagna pizzocchieri and larger plates (maggiore) such as stuffed short rib braciole. The pasta section in particular will always be evolving, but a couple of standouts have already been identified on the opening menu. Doyle points to the lasagna, which incorporates riced potato and kale from Stillman's Farm, a source for much of the menu, approximately half of which is vegetarian. And Harmon extols the process behind the fusilli con fungi.

"Brian dries mushrooms and integrates that with some of the flour in the fusilli, so when that dish comes to the table, it's a very aromatic take on mushrooms," Harmon says. "He's doing enormously clever things."

Harmon hopes his customers can see that same cleverness in the wine list, which is "80 to 85 percent" Italian. "My passion—shared very much with David—is approachable, unassuming and delicious wine. We're going to do a carafe program, and that's very European," Harmon says. "I'm frankly so excited to work with Italian wine again because it offers such a huge variety of styles and ability to work with food."

Indeed, for Doyle, Perez-Alers and Harmon, passion and personal taste have fueled the entire project. "We really badly wanted Italian for our own benefit, because we love it," Harmon says. "And we really badly wanted to keep brunch, because we love it."

ONE AND DONE: This drink has a luxe price, but it's the only order you'll need for the night.

Drink of the Moment
LA TRUFFE NOIRE

PRICE: $33

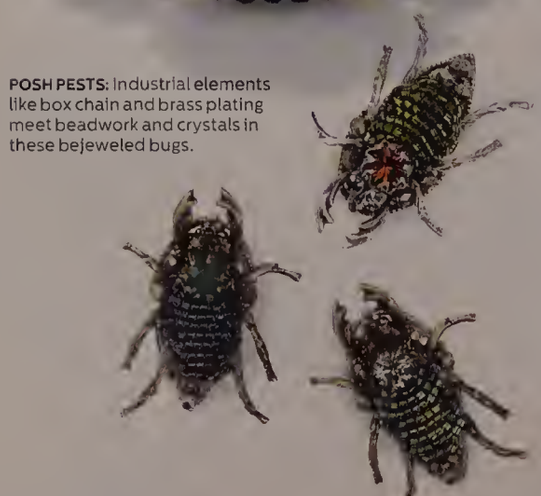
INVENTOR: Bistro du Midi sommelier Todd Lipman

INGREDIENTS: Michter's 10 Year Bourbon, black truffle-infused Dolin sweet vermouth, Carpano Antica Formula, housemade black truffle syrup, white truffle honey rim

TRY IT IF YOU'RE LOOKING FOR: "A luxurious Manhattan." And a stiff drink. With two and half ounces of bourbon, you'll only need to order one.

MAKE IT A DOUBLE: If you're generous enough to share, the drink can be served in two glasses.

TASTE: "There's a little bit of the heat from the bourbon," and a lot of truffle going on, but the white truffle honey "doesn't flavor the drink," Lipman says. "Ultimately it's an aromatic component."



PAIR IT WITH: A dish that's "fully flavored with some earthy elements." Lipman suggests the prime rib-eye, braised lamb neck or, if you're feeling fish, monkfish au poivre, adding, "It and this cocktail are very good friends."

SWEETEN THE MEAL: Lipman enjoys the smokiness of the Carpano Antica Formula: "It really lends something special to anything where you can use sweet vermouth." It's also his aperitif of choice, on the rocks with an orange twist.

TEA FOR ROUND TWO: Bistro du Midi's latest drink addition is Thé de Marin: housemade Earl Grey syrup, Brugal Añejo rum, VSOP brandy and an orange peel. Lipman notes, "The [tea's] hint of bitterness really brings out the vanilla in the rum. And then the brandy openly adds a little bit of spice to it." / Sarah Hagman

A South End favorite's stock of covetable curiosities has gotten a little curiouser with the launch of Miriam Haskell for PATCH NYC, a limited-edition collection of handmade jewelry and table toppers adorned with beetles, flies and other creepy crawlies. PATCH NYC co-owner Don Carney was recently appointed creative director of the storied costume jewelry house, and he jumped at the chance to bring the two brands together. "When Linda [Fialkoff, Miriam Haskell's president] first suggested this collaboration, I was working on a new series of insect ink drawings for some beautifully detailed vintage frames," Carney explains. "Focusing the intricate hand-detailed Miriam Haskell beading techniques on the insects really brought them to life." Scope out the specimens at PATCH NYC's new gallery space across from the main boutique, which Carney and co-owner John Ross hope to use for exhibitions, workshops and other events likely to attract a swarm. / Jacqueline Houton

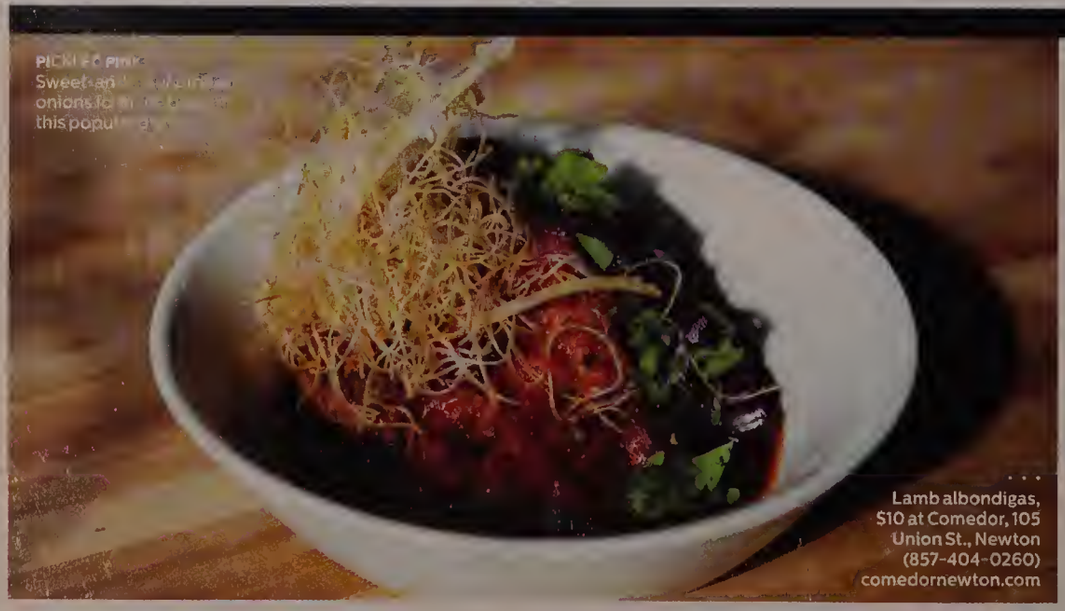
BOND'S BID: Bondir's chef/owner went home with a case of 1989 Chateau Meyney.

OFF THE BLOCK

NEW ENGLAND'S BEST SPECIALTY WINE SHOP MAY BE WHERE YOU LEAST EXPECT IT.

AFTER BIDDER 320 RAISES HIS PADDLE at the Skinner Fine Wines auction, there's no shout of "Going once, going twice," no breathless pause, no decisive swing of a hammer. The Fine Wines Department at Skinner was established in 2007 with what was, and still is, the only fine wine auction in New England, but it's not the theatrical scene one might imagine. There is no ticket, no elaborate pre-registration process. There isn't even a dress code. And bidder 320 turns out to be not at all whom one would expect to have just won a fine case of 1989 Chateau Meyney, at a very good price.



"It simply could not be a friendlier process," founding director Marie Keep assured me before the two-day event in late October. And the atmosphere upon arrival is light, social and unhurried. Keep steps to the podium, welcomes the crowd and, during the next several hours, with her colleague Michael Moser, steadily works through the 444 lots that make up the Doctor's Collection, the evening's single consignment from an unnamed but clearly expert private collector. Both auctioneers speak with the kind of authoritative ease that makes otherwise fastidious minds think Oh, why not, it's only another 25 bucks.

There are certainly some big-time collectors—seasoned bidders who only seem to lift their heads for the words '82 or Domaine Romanée-Conti. (And yes, a case of 1982 Chateau Lafite Rothschild does breeze off early at $25,000.) But most bidders only seem interested in a few cases, or sometimes just a few bottles, like the lone bottle of '87 Chambertin that goes for $80 after a couple of bids.

The Skinner auction turns out to be the last thing most people would expect: just a great place to buy really cool wine. Not wine to collect or invest in, but simply wine to drink. Let's say you have a group of wine lovers interested in trying vintage California. You could have everyone chip in $25 and hold a horizontal tasting of various 1974 California cabernets ($300 for the case). Stressing the wine for an important dinner party? Why not give them something to talk about with a "Dinner lot" that includes an '82 Tattinger Brut, an '89 Barolo, a '78 Jaboulet and an '80 Penfolds, plus a lovely '78 Beerenauslese ($275 for the lot). Or you could be the most popular guy at the holiday party by showing up with a bottle of 1955 Sandeman Vintage Port ($150).

And if you missed these, you can always get a table at Bondir. For bidder 320 turns out to be none other than Jason Bond, chef/owner of Bondir Cambridge and Bondir Concord, who on his annual trips to Skinner has picked up everything from a case of craft brews for a beer dinner to a single '59 Lafite he had his staff blind taste (!) so they could better understand bottle aging. But most of what he buys, including tonight's case, goes right onto his list.

"We look at these wines the same way we look at the ingredients we use in the kitchen," Bond explains. "We're trying to find something special, things guests will be excited to see." Say, a quarter-century-old Left Bank Bordeaux, bought from the cellar of an astute collector by a chef aiming to provide a truly special experience that, like everything at auction, will only be "going once." / Knoefel Longest

Good Eats: Getting Chile

The spiced lamb meatballs and crown of ultra-fine toasted noodles drive the popularity of the albondigas at Comedor, Newton Centre's newest hot spot. But it's the pickled onions at the bottom of the bowl that are the defining element of the dish. Following Chilean tradition, chef/owner Jakob White chops the vegetable and soaks the pieces in red wine until the liquid turns to vinegar; the onion takes on a juicy, sweet and sour sharpness and a magenta hue. The final product, vaguely resembling Jewish stuffed cabbage, is sumptuous and satisfying. / Elizabeth Bomze

SMALL WONDERS

Nothing says decadence quite like doubling down on a dish that will be gone faster than the first round of cocktails. We found some of the most exquisite petite bites in town, made with ingredients such as truffles, caviar and chocolate-topped foie, in case you're ever in the mood to put your money where your mouth is. / Meghan Kavanaugh

L'Espalier serves up classic culinary indulgence with its German Osetra caviar dish, featuring an ounce of the burst-in-your-mouth sturgeon eggs for $210. This king of all appetizers is presented on ice in a crystal vase, surrounded by traditional accompaniments like egg mousse and potato blinis.

O Ya chef/owner Tim Cushman used French cuisine as inspiration for his foie gras nigiri, a $16.50 bite made with La Belle grade A foie gras, Claudio Corallo cocoa pulp and balsamic vinegar and paired with a sip of aged sake to mimic a classic foie and port pairing. "It was a beautiful marriage of flavors," he says.

An entree portion of white truffle could set diners back $150, so chef Tony Messina aims to give them a taste instead at Uni Sashimi Bar, where a spoonful of the fancy fungi hits a $35 price point. The Italian white truffle spoon pairs "one of the most luxurious ingredients in the whole world" with peekytoe crab, charred corn, apple cider, pickled apple and miso risotto.

Q&A DRINKING IT ALL IN

South Boston born and bred. Jack Maxwell essentially grew up in bars. Now he's putting his love of drinking culture to good use, trekking the globe in Travel Channel's new show Booze Traveler. We caught up with him on a break from filming in Australia to talk before the show's Nov. 24 premiere. / Alexandra Cavallo

TELL US ABOUT GROWING UP IN SOUTHIE BARS. A couple of us kids from the projects figured we'd make some money, so we would shine shoes in barrooms.... These old men, these Irish guys, would say, "Jackie! How are you, kid?" It's not that they were shitfaced. It was just that they had a couple of drinks, and it took the edge off. I would love the stories, even more than the money. I'd be on bended knees shining shoes, and they'd be telling these stories. Sometimes they'd be fantastical; they'd be adventurous, and they'd be exciting. Sometimes not true, I'm sure, but never boring. I said, "Wow, that's it. A pub is the public living room."

SO ARE YOU THE ANTHONY BOURDAIN OF BOOZE? I would never say that, because he's a published author and a chef. I just love adventure. I love discovery. I would never pass myself off as this super expert who knows everything about alcohol, but I'm learning. And through me, hopefully, you will learn. And I honestly drink them. There's no producing here. When you see me drink a whole drink of a frog in a blender—I drank the whole thing, I honestly did. And it's a live frog they put in the blender, bones and all.... But it's not just the shocking drinks of the world. It's the real drinks of the world.

WERE YOU EVER UNSURE YOU COULD DRINK SOMETHING? When we find a tribe in the Amazon that took us forever or, in Mongolia, a nomad family that took us two days to track down with a professional tracker, once we find them and they say, "Drink this camel milk vodka," I couldn't say no. Because you had me here; you took me in. How can I accept all of that but say no to the cocktails that are a part of your culture?

WHAT'S YOUR GO-TO DRINK? This experience has changed me. I'm a martini guy.... But I've learned to really open my horizons. So I'll ask a bartender, "What's your favorite thing to make? What's the thing nobody orders that you think they should?" Because you can have adventure inside a barroom, inside a lounge, inside a cocktail glass—you don't have to go around the world for that.

ART FOR MANY SAKES

A PSYCHOTHERAPIST EXPLORES THE OBSTACLES THAT CAN BLOCK (AND BOOST) CREATIVITY.

An Absorbing Errand* by Janna Malamud Smith
Published by Counterpoint, 264 pages, $16

WORDSWORTH "WANDERED lonely as a cloud," but the poet didn't entirely go it alone. He had a loving relationship with his sister Dorothy, who served as a "lightning rod" and source of literary inspiration, showing "flashes of feeling" to her reserved brother. His is just one of the case studies explored in this fourth book by local psychotherapist Janna Malamud Smith, who muses on the many pleasures, pains and paradoxes of art-making, devoting each chapter to a different challenge of the creative process.

Smith examines the letter-writing friendship of poets Robert Lowell and Elizabeth Bishop, who used the tension-filled distance between them to activate inspiration. Then there's Michael Jackson, beaten as a boy when he made dance mistakes. Somehow this hellish treatment perversely fueled his wild talent, and Smith probes how the victim/victimizer combination evident in Thriller informs his art and the many Michaels he invented. Another electric double-dealer under Smith's gaze is Lady Gaga, whose famous dualities include narcissistic outrageousness alongside claims to Catholic-girl goodness.

All artists deal with ruthlessness, shame, envy and self-doubt. These are subjects poetically explored by Smith, the daughter of novelist Bernard Malamud, who shares how she entered that writer's door herself, by becoming a book lover and an astute art wonderer.

FROM PAGE 55: Dickens confessed to his admirer Fyodor Dostoyevsky, as Dostoyevsky later recounted in a letter, that "there were two people in him...one who feels as he ought to feel, and one who feels the opposite." From the one who felt the opposite, Dickens claimed to have "made his evil characters." From the other, he noted, "I try to live my life." He attempted to channel into his fiction the parts of himself he despised. ◆ Thrill-seekers should make time for Busch Gardens, Williamsburg's behemoth amusement park and home to Apollo's Chariot, rated one of the best steel roller coasters in the world.

BLAST IN THE PAST: From Yorktown to Williamsburg, Virginia's Historic Triangle offers plenty of sights.

The Escape Artist / Scott Kearnan

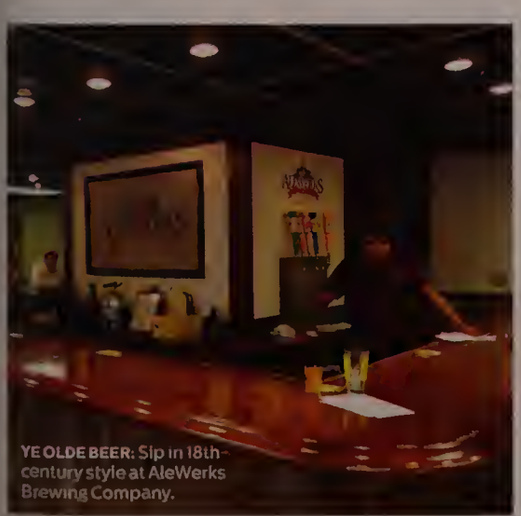
TIME TRAVEL

VIRGINIA IS FOR LOVERS—OF HISTORY.

AMERICA WAS BORN IN BOSTON'S backyard, with the first shots of the Revolutionary War fired in the battles of Lexington and Concord. Bostonians are pretty blase about our embarrassment of such historic riches—been there, done that, took the elementary school field trip. But it can be cool to experience Colonial history elsewhere. So if you want to see where the war's final shots were fired, head to the "Historic Triangle" of Virginia. This corner of the Old Dominion State, tucked on a coastal peninsula, is defined by three primary points of interest—Williamsburg, Jamestown and Yorktown—that offer an easy way for history buffs to work serious sightseeing into even a short getaway.

Start your trip at the triangle's tip: Williamsburg, an adorable enclave of Colonial architecture—all cute clapboard and gambrel roofs. Williamsburg was a vital early settlement, founded in 1632 and once the capital of the Virginia Colony. And its historic district, Colonial Williamsburg, is a living museum where visitors can meander among preserved storefronts and period-attired guides. It's like Downtown Disney meets Sturbridge Village, home to about 20 different tours, many self-directed, museum galleries filled with early American antiques and folk art, and numerous shops for souvenirs. Need replica silverware for your next porridge-filled dinner party? You're covered.

Like Boston, Williamsburg is a college town, home to William & Mary, the country's second oldest institution of higher learning. (The first? Harvard, duh.) So the student population also ensures a handful of lively hangouts for modern visitors. Fat Canary, a four-diamond-rated restaurant and wine bar, has homey digs and a classy-rustic American menu. (Free-range guinea fowl, anyone?) Visit its adjoining relative, the aptly named Cheese Shop, to grab unique fromage and charcuterie to enjoy back in your hotel room. And score a tasting in the taproom of AleWerks Brewing Company, an award-winning Williamsburg microbrewer that produces "historical beers," following recipes used by 18th-century Virginia taverns, alongside modern styles like its Bitter Valentine, an ultra-hoppy double IPA.



Williamsburg will probably offer your best lodging options, too. So consider booking at Williamsburg Lodge, a mid-priced alternative to the luxe

Williamsburg Inn. You'll have access to the same free bike rentals, eight tennis courts and three golf courses at Golden Horseshoe Golf Club, where you can hit the links, and then the poolside grill, with the kind of polo-clad old-money types that made fortunes off tobacco farms. (Try not to hold it against them.) The rooms are spacious and comfortable, and you'll probably want to grab a separate snooze at the spa, which offers services inspired by historic eras, like the "18th-century Colonial Orange & Ginger Scrub & Massage."

Next on your Historic Triangle tour, devote a day to exploring Historic Jamestowne, the National Parks-run site that marks the first English colony in the Americas. (Yes, there's a statue of Pocahontas.) Take an organized tour or just wander by ruined forts, around still-active excavation areas or through the "Archaearium," a museum of settler and native relics, from coins to skeletons, buttressed by plenty of historical factoids, including creepy tales of cannibalism.

Skip the highway and hop on the Colonial Parkway, a gently curving route shaded by tall, lush trees, en route to the third point: Yorktown. You can watch yachts laze along the York River from Riverwalk Landing, a waterfront development with green spaces for festivals and concerts, shopping and restaurants. (Behold: the sloppy Fat Bastard burger at Water Street Grille, 16 ounces of sauce-slathered gluttony.) But the main attraction is Yorktown Battlefield, where colonists triumphed in the Revolution's final siege and at last sent the Redcoats packing. There's also the nearby Yorktown Victory Center, if you prefer historic settlement replicas and hands-on exhibits. But the main draw is the battlefield, marked by several miles of road for self-guided auto tours past various vital sites. The grassy fields are quiet now, but those shots still ring loud and clear. ◆

ELYSIAN FIELDS

THAO NGOC SHOWS WHAT NEIGHBORHOOD EATING IS ALL ABOUT.

THAO NGOC
1331 Dorchester Ave., Boston (617-506-1224) facebook.com/thaongocrestaurant

BOSTON PROPER HAS AN INCREDIBLE dining scene of mid-range to high-end restaurants, mostly concentrated in the dense downtown neighborhoods within a couple of miles of the State House: the South and North Ends, Back Bay, Fort Point, Beacon Hill. But to really appreciate its breadth, your scope has to be wider, embracing residential neighborhoods like Chinatown, Allston, Jamaica Plain and Eastie. If you're not regularly visiting Dorchester for traditional Vietnamese cuisine, for instance, you're only skimming the surface. To truly earn your food-geek stripes, you need to hit places like Thao Ngoc, a small, brightly lit space in Fields Corner, a hike that will reward your intrepidity with ravishing food at astonishing prices.

You might start with a special of Vietnamese mini-crepes (bánh khot, $8.95) made from rice flour, coconut milk and turmeric, filled with mung bean sprouts, shrimp and scallions, cooked in a steel mold like a Danish ebelskiver pan. You wrap each of these little beauties in lettuce leaves along with fresh mint and basil; then dip it in a sweet-sour mixture of fish sauce (Vietnam's delicious version of soy sauce flavored with fermented anchovies), sugar, garlic and chilies. Who could find fried chicken wings (cánh gà chiên, $6.50 for five) a challenge? These big whole wings are marinated in fish sauce, sugar and garlic, lightly dredged in cornstarch, deep-fried and dotted with hot chilies—not unlike teriyaki wings, but spicier, more fascinating. Grilled Vietnamese ham rolls (nem cuon, $3.95 for two) are the familiar fresh rolls of rice vermicelli, julienned carrots and cucumber wrapped in translucent, soft rice-paper wrappers, served with a sweet-sour dipping sauce. Instead of more common proteins like shrimp or tofu, these include Vietnamese "ham," aka giò lua, a fine-grained garlicky pork sausage sliced into rectangles and fried crisp: a welcome novelty.

Duck thigh salad (goi vit, $7.95) nests a few boiled, thick-sliced duck thighs over a salad of shredded cabbage, carrots and onion, topped with fresh cilantro and mint and crushed peanuts with a sweet-sour dressing. The result is light yet satisfying (but be careful with the bones). Sea conch salad (goi oc, $19.95) takes fresh conch out of its shell, slices it thin and stir-fries it to reduce its natural toughness, then tosses it into a salad of cabbage, carrot and onion dusted with sesame seed. Scoop some up with saucer-shaped rice crackers and spoon on a thin tart dressing based on rice vinegar with a lot of julienned fresh ginger. It's a lovely, subtly flavored seafood dish. Grilled clam with scallion and peanut (nghêu nuong mo hành, $12.95) is not only gorgeous and tasty but a steal, offering a good dozen fresh littlenecks simply grilled, topped with a dressing of scallions, fish sauce and garlic, sprinkled with chopped peanuts and served with simple condiments of mixed salt and pepper with fresh limes to squeeze over them.

Green salad soup with shrimp, pork and tofu (canh cai be xanh tôm thit, $10.95 small, $16.95 large) cooks chopped mustard greens in a simple broth piquantly flavored with reconstituted dried shrimp and tiny, loose meatballs of ground pork—fresh, light and meant for sharing. Vietnamese crab thick noodle soup (bánh canh cua, $7.95) is far more rich and beguiling with its golden rice-thickened seafood broth. It's loaded with thick, chewy Vietnamese rice/tapioca-flour noodles reminiscent of udon, chunks of Dungeness crabmeat and a gnarly chunk of pork trotter, given wonderful additional aromas with scallions, cilantro and lemongrass. Goat hot pot (lau dê, $29.95 small, $45.95 large) is a head-turner that demands a large party. Its copious chunks of goat, lotus root slices and hairy nuggets of taro warm to a boil over a tabletop burner in a dazzlingly complex, deep-flavored broth. Accompaniments to stir in include a tall pile of greens, tofu chunks and thin fresh yellow rice noodles, plus an unusual, funky, miso-like condiment. Caramelized catfish and pork (ca thit khó to, $12.95) coats thin fillets of catfish and thin slices of pork belly in a syrupy sauce of caramelized sugar given fierce aromatic depth with shallots, garlic and black pepper. Chinese influence is evident in lobster with ginger and scallions (lobster xào hành gung, $22.95). Climb a stepstool to select two Maine lobsters out of the dining room's live tank with tongs. These are cut into pieces and cracked, the exposed meat dusted with flour to add a light coating when steamed, the sauce a simple admixture of soy sauce, ginger and scallions. (Don't feel bad about using a fork to pick the meat from the shell.) It's perfectly simple and scandalously bargain-priced.

Beverages include iced and hot coffees with sweetened condensed milk ($3.50), fresh limeade ($3.25) and smoothies ($3.50) in flavors like strawberry, coconut and avocado. Service is friendly and patient with English speakers, though you may want to order using menu numbers to avoid miscommunication. The ambience is bare-boned; no cloth napkins or fancy accoutrements here—the money goes into the kitchen. Bring a few friends and order up a feast that rarely tops $20 a head, and you will start to understand what our late, beloved mayor Tom Menino often said: The heart and soul of Boston's restaurant scene is found in its humble, family-run neighborhood spots, of which Thao Ngoc is a nearly perfect example. ◆

SkinHealth Centers

Q: I'M STARTING TO NOTICE FINE LINES AROUND MY EYES, MOUTH AND CHEEKS. WHAT DO YOU RECOMMEND?

A: Many of our clients have been doing skin tightening treatments and are thrilled with the results. This is a relatively new procedure.

Skin Tightening occurs by utilizing RF (radio frequency) energy to stimulate existing collagen and elastin fibers, enhance collagen secretion, and improve skin's elasticity. From the very first treatment, collagen fibers are contracted, giving an immediate firmed and tightened appearance.

The procedure is suitable for most areas of the face including the jowls, cheeks and forehead as well the sensitive areas of the eyes, neck and decollete. There is no downtime, you can go back to work or out to dinner immediately afterwards.

INTERSTELLAR* ★★

FAR FROM STELLAR

NOLAN AIMS FOR THE STARS, BUT BARELY MAKES IT OUT OF THE DIRT.

CHRISTOPHER NOLAN'S LATEST FILM, Interstellar, is big (much of it is filmed in 70mm IMAX), long (169 minutes), expensive ($165 million) and set in an unspecified near-future that's covered in dirt. Climate change has taken hold, and man's ambition for science and exploration is a mostly forgotten dream.

Of course, Nolan is one of our most literal filmmakers, so the first time we see Matthew McConaughey's Cooper, he's awaking from a nightmare involving his younger days as a Chuck Yeager-like test pilot for the remnants of NASA. But now he's a farmer. In fact, everyone now seems to be a farmer, fruitlessly trying to coax crops from that endless supply of dirt that keeps raining from the sky.

In the farmhouse Cooper shares with his 10-year-old daughter Murph (Mackenzie Foy) and 15-year-old son Tom (Timothée Chalamet), along with the children's maternal grandfather (John Lithgow), the shelves lining Murph's room hold his old textbooks, along with a model space shuttle that's caked with dust. Like I said, literal.

Tom is content to settle into his expected role in the dying cornfields, while Murph is a dreamer who takes after her dad. During a parent-teacher conference that ends with the bright-eyed young girl's suspension, Cooper defends her for stirring up trouble at school by bringing in one of those textbooks, banned for the supposed propaganda within. Here, the Apollo Space Program—and specifically the Apollo 11 lunar landing—is believed to be a Big Lie perpetrated by the United States to bankrupt the Soviets.

Yes, it's that kind of future. And it's also the kind of film that isn't content to keep its crops of corn relegated to the fields that are lovingly photographed by cinematographer Hoyte Van Hoytema, the talented Swede who shot 2008's Let the Right One In before graduating to Hollywood fare like last year's Her. Spike Jonze's masterpiece offered a much more successful look at near-future human (and non-human) relationships than the one Nolan and his longtime writing partner, younger brother Jonathan, ham-fistedly attempt here.

The Nolan boys' cornpone, on-the-nose dialogue doesn't help matters. "We used to look up at the sky and wonder at our place in the stars," Cooper observes. "Now we just look down and worry about our place in the dirt." McConaughey's a terrific actor, and this is his first lead movie role since winning his long-deserved Best Actor Oscar for last year's Dallas Buyers Club. But while this story will take him to the furthest reaches of another galaxy and even into—cue the Twilight Zone music—a fifth dimension, the Nolans have stranded him with a script that contains very Earth-bound bromides about how love is the key... to everything.

The Nolans have stranded [McConaughey] with a script that contains very Earth-bound bromides...

It's a script Jonathan Nolan spent years developing for Steven Spielberg before the director moved on to other projects. Picking up the mantle, Christopher began working on it with his brother, and the two incorporated ideas inspired by the work of theoretical physicist Kip Thorne. They also managed to work in a bit of Dylan Thomas, quoting his "Do not go gentle into that good night" exactly three times, in case we fail to grasp its significance as Cooper is faced with the decision to rocket into the unknown in an attempt to save the human race, even if it means he might never see his family again.

Murph is understandably upset by his decision, refusing to say goodbye to her dad as he tearfully drives away from the family farm in his truck. A hard cut finds him in the capsule of a rocket he shares with his crew—Romilly (David Gyasi), Doyle (Wes Bentley and his beard), Amelia (Anne Hathaway) and the robot TARS (voiced by Bill Irwin)—as they blast off toward a rendezvous with their craft, the Endurance.

Spielberg might have made this sequence resonate, and given his skill with child actors, he certainly would have mined more from the relationship between Cooper and Murph, which makes up the cold heart of this movie. But as a filmmaker, Nolan is far more suited to staging spectacular sequences—like the one where Cooper must match his craft's rotation with an out-of-control orbiter—than to dealing with the emotional consequences of the fact that for every hour Cooper spends on a planet the Endurance crew reaches, seven years will elapse for Murph and everyone else back home.

Ah, back home. As an ill-advised subplot develops in the second act, Nolan and his editor, Lee Smith, begin cross-cutting with parallel activity on Earth. It's a terrible idea, owing more to a sequence that Nolan probably enjoys from Philip Kaufman's The Right Stuff than to any real purpose here, as the threat to Cooper and the human race has less to do with the secrets of the universe than with man's nature—which is literally embodied by a character named "Mann," in case you didn't get it.

Nolan's clearly also a fan of 1968's 2001: A Space Odyssey, but in spoon-feeding us all of the answers in his cinematic paean to Stanley Kubrick's classic, he's fashioned something closer to Peter Hyams' 2010. Some space is best left unexplored. ◆ plays the Orpheum Theatre on Nov. 18.

Music / Paul Robicheau

BLURRED LINES

ATMOSPHERIC ART-ROCKERS CONTINUE A SURPRISING ASCENT.

ALT-J COULD BE THE LEAST LIKELY BAND to forge a musical association with pop provocateur Miley Cyrus. The English group plays moody trip-folk under a moniker derived from a Mac keyboard shortcut for the Delta symbol, an identity as oblique as Alt-J's music.

Nonetheless, Alt-J won the 2012 Mercury Prize for best UK album with its debut, An Awesome Wave, and Cyrus caught the buzz, tapping the song "Fitzpleasure" for a video interlude in her live show. In turn, Alt-J drummer Thom Green got the green light to tackle a remix of Cyrus' "4x4." And the group ended up using a sample of her refrain "I'm a female rebel" in "Hunger of the Pine" for its September release, This Is All Yours.

"She's got a great voice," keyboardist/singer Gus Unger-Hamilton says. "We were writing 'Hunger of the Pine,' and it was sounding quite similar to Thom's Miley remix, so we tried putting in these nods to that, and it worked.... We took the voice and it gave [the song] a new feeling."

Not that anyone's likely to twerk to Alt-J's new album. It's similar to the group's million-selling debut: modest and mysterious, with odd floating harmonies and minimalist, electronics-steeped textures, punctuated by Green's cymbal-free drums, bongos and percussion. If it echoes the hushed tones of a dorm-room experiment, there's good reason.

"It was partly due to our circumstances," Unger-Hamilton, 25, says of that sound, developed while band members were University of Leeds students with a mutual appreciation for Radiohead and Portishead. "We didn't have the money for any equipment. We were playing on basic stuff. We didn't have anywhere to practice other than our bedrooms at university, so we were kind of quiet, living in a shared house."

To conjure the same informal vibe this time around, the group settled into a Brixton studio space with An Awesome Wave producer Charlie Andrew. But there was one big difference. Alt-J was down to a trio—Green, Unger-Hamilton and singer/guitarist Joe Newman—after co-founding guitarist/bassist Gwil Sainsbury left the group in the wake of its tour-heavy ascent.

"It's kind of like using a Ouija board.... You're all moving it, but nobody knows who's moving it."

"We didn't have time to get too lost by it," Unger-Hamilton says. "Our therapy for losing Gwil was to concentrate on the album, and actually, we found pretty quickly we were writing really good new songs."

Among the standouts is "Left Hand Free," a catchy tune with a bluesy twang that opens with Newman intoning "Hey shady baby, I'm hot like the prodigal son." Hot like a sly English cousin to '90s alt-rockers Soul Coughing.

"We never know where each song's going to go," says Unger-Hamilton, disputing reports of record company pressure to write a hit. "You start with a guitar skeleton for a song and see where the band wants to take it as a whole. It's kind of like using a Ouija board. You put your hands on the glass, and you're all moving it, but nobody knows who's moving it."

For much of This Is All Yours, that means sparse, mutating soundscapes that blend the pretty and the abstract. Alt-J bridges ambient rock, folk and hip-hop with vocals that slip from wordless choirboy accents to impressionistic lyrics inspired by literature and film. Three tracks reference Nara, a Japanese city filled with roaming deer, while "The Gospel of John Hurt" refers to the actor's famous chest-bursting scene in Alien.

"Lyrics are really important to us," Unger-Hamilton says, "but sometimes it just makes more sense to have lyrics that don't mean a great deal because you're using the voice as a kind of instrument."

Alt-J plays the Orpheum on Nov. 18 as part of a largely sold-out U.S. tour (with utility musician Cameron Knight covering gaps once filled by Sainsbury). If Alt-J hadn't clicked, however, Unger-Hamilton says that he and his school friends would probably be "quite useless" today.

"We graduated in 2010, when all these companies were on hiring freezes because of the economic shit that was going on," says the keyboardist, who majored in English at Leeds while his bandmates studied other art subjects. "We would have found it really hard and wouldn't have known what to do. It's nice that this worked out." ◆

PET SMARTS

FOR LESS THAN 20 BUCKS, YOU TOO CAN TEST YOUR DOG'S INTELLIGENCE.

A FEW WEEKS AGO, 60 MINUTES RAN A segment on Chaser, a border collie who knows more than a thousand nouns. The show posited that dogs might be smarter than we believe—for instance, dogs will take a cue when a human points at an object, while a monkey will ignore you and just keep on masturbating. Dr. Brian Hare, one of the experts interviewed by 60 Minutes, runs a website called Dognition that purports to measure your dog's intelligence. I decided to sign up one of my dogs and find out how much (if any) brainpower lurks inside that furry skull.

The Dognition program assesses your dog's responses in five different areas, including empathy and memory. But the first test concerns the owner, who is required to cough up $19 for the tests. Credit card charged, I confirmed I'm dumb enough to pay $19 to "get beyond 'woof,'" as the site optimistically proclaims. I enrolled Manny, our flat-coat retriever mutt, to find out if he can give Chaser a run for the title of Smartest Dog in the World.

When you first register, Dognition offers a drop-down menu with a selection of treacly questions intended to help define your animal. For instance: "What is your dog's unique genius?" (Rolling in dead animals?) Or "My dog is a hero because..." (He stops humping his bed when I yell at him?) I chose to answer a question about where my dog got his name.

Unfortunately, this particular moniker is an object lesson on why you don't name your dog after professional athletes—because the namesake might test positive for a woman's fertility drug, get suspended for 50 games and ultimately fizzle out of the league. I guess it could've been worse. Be careful what you name your dog, lest you find yourself yelling, "Time for din-din, Ray Rice!" for the next 10 years.

The first Dognition test concerned empathy and Manny's ability to maintain eye contact. In his case, that's "eye" singular, since he only has one good eye. The other is filled with an iridescent cataract, which led my 4-year-old to declare it "Manny's bad-guy eye." The test directs you to stand there holding a dog treat under your right eye to find out how long your dog will maintain eye contact, but I don't have any dog treats. Thus I ended up standing there with a Ritz cracker in front of my eye, staring at my dog and wondering what I'm doing with my life. Manny, for his part, didn't break eye contact, leading the Dognition software to tell me, "Manny's empathy scores were off the charts." Either that or he really wanted a Ritz.

The next game assessed Manny's ability to follow a pointing gesture. But first Dognition flashed an ominous message, warning that "Our system can detect and flag false data entry." Why the threat, Dognition? Is anyone trying to cook their Dognition profile to fraudulently inflate their dog's resale value? It's not a Harvard transcript, people.

Manny turned out to be great with the pointing game, leading the program to declare that "Manny is remarkably like a human infant, who start reading communicative gestures at around 9 months old." I'm sure they mean that to be cute, but think about it: the brain of an infant, the bite strength of a carnivorous woodland predator. And this thing lives in your house.

Subsequent tests focused on traits like memory and cunning. I had to improvise on these, because you're supposed to have two people involved—one to hold the dog and one to set up the experiments. My wife, Heather, flatly declared that she had better things to do than engage in amateur canine intelligence research. So I had to lead Manny to his starting position, generally about four feet away, and get him to stay there until I'd set up the test, whatever it was. This led to a few impasses because I'd told him to stay, but at some point you've got to start a timer or otherwise get moving on whatever psychological manipulation you've got planned. So he'd be sitting there drooling, staring at a cracker, while I'm going, "OK, Manny, let's go! Experiment time! Get over here and figure out which cup has a treat. Now. Go get it. Get the treat. Getthetreatgetthetreat. Don't stay. Participate. Do something."

Oddly, his obedience was screwing up the tests. But perhaps his lack of gusto had to do with the fact that I'd switched to Goldfish for the treats because I didn't want him eating a whole sleeve of Ritz crackers. Maybe he was protesting the wage cut.

Ultimately, we got through all the tests, and Dognition spit out its report. It turns out that Manny's got great memory and communication skills, and he's actually more trustworthy than I thought. Now is it too late to start calling him Brady? ◆

Soroff On / Molly McGrath

OFF THE SIDELINES

THE SPORTSCASTER CHATS ABOUT EARNING RESPECT, DRIPPING SWEAT AND LOCKER ROOM ETIQUETTE.

Born and raised in San Francisco, Fox Sports personality Molly McGrath was a cheerleader at Boston College, where she produced and hosted her own sports web show. After graduating in 2011, she became a sideline reporter for the Celtics, and she joined Fox Sports in 2013, covering the NFL. In March, she was chosen to co-host America's Pregame, and she is the lead sideline reporter for the current college football season. She lives in Santa Monica, California.

Jonathan Soroff: Molly Anne McGrath. Does it get any more Irish girl next door than that?
Molly McGrath: I don't think so, but a lot of people would be shocked to learn that I'm half-Mexican/Spanish. I'm like that [bygone] bar in downtown Boston, Jose McIntyre's.

It seems like you always had a laser-like focus on becoming a sportscaster. Since what age, and why? Since I was a little girl, watching Giants games with my dad. I knew I wanted to work in sports and to be in television, but I didn't have the laser-like focus until I was in college. At BC, I got internships and saw the passion of the Boston fan base. I thought, "This drives people absolutely crazy, and it scares me a little bit—but if it gets people this worked up, it's something I have to do."

Do you ever get sick of talking about sports? No, especially because I have AL and NL teams, AFC and NFC teams. I'm a Giants fan and a Red Sox fan, a 49ers fan and a Patriots fan. So I have a lot of teams to root for and games to watch.

So it's all sports, all the time? No. Sometimes, there's nothing better than coming home and watching HGTV. That's my guilty pleasure, watching the fixer-upper, house-hunter-type shows. It gives my mind a bit of a break.

Should Gillette Stadium be closer to Boston? [Laughs] I think Bostonians think so. The people of Foxborough probably wouldn't be thrilled. But yeah, it's a pain getting out there. There's nothing like that cold wind hitting your face, though, and not being able to feel your entire body just screams Patriots game.

Would you ever date a pro athlete? Ahhh...no comment.

Sport you play best? You know the saying "Those who can't do, teach"? Those who can't play, report. I'm not athletic. I was a cheerleader, and I was a competitive swimmer, so I do have a competitive drive, but I'm just not that coordinated. I played basketball for six years, and I sucked. I enjoy watching other people do what I can't.

Isn't cheerleading a sport? Competitive cheerleading, with gymnastics and stunting, is a sport. But if you're talking about pom squad, that's dancing.

When you were a cheerleader, did people assume you were a ditz? Probably. I'm sure people judged me for that, the same way people judge me for being a blond reporter for Fox Sports, because apparently we're a dime a dozen. But the more people are able to hear me and listen to what I have to say, it's easier to prove those preconceptions wrong.

So what do you think you get stereotyped about the most in your career? It's tough being a woman in sports. You may not always be taken seriously. You have to work twice as hard, and your margin for error is twice as small.

How do you project authority when someone's speaking down to you? You just smile and ask kickass questions and show that you know what you're talking about. You do your homework. Respect is something that has to be earned.

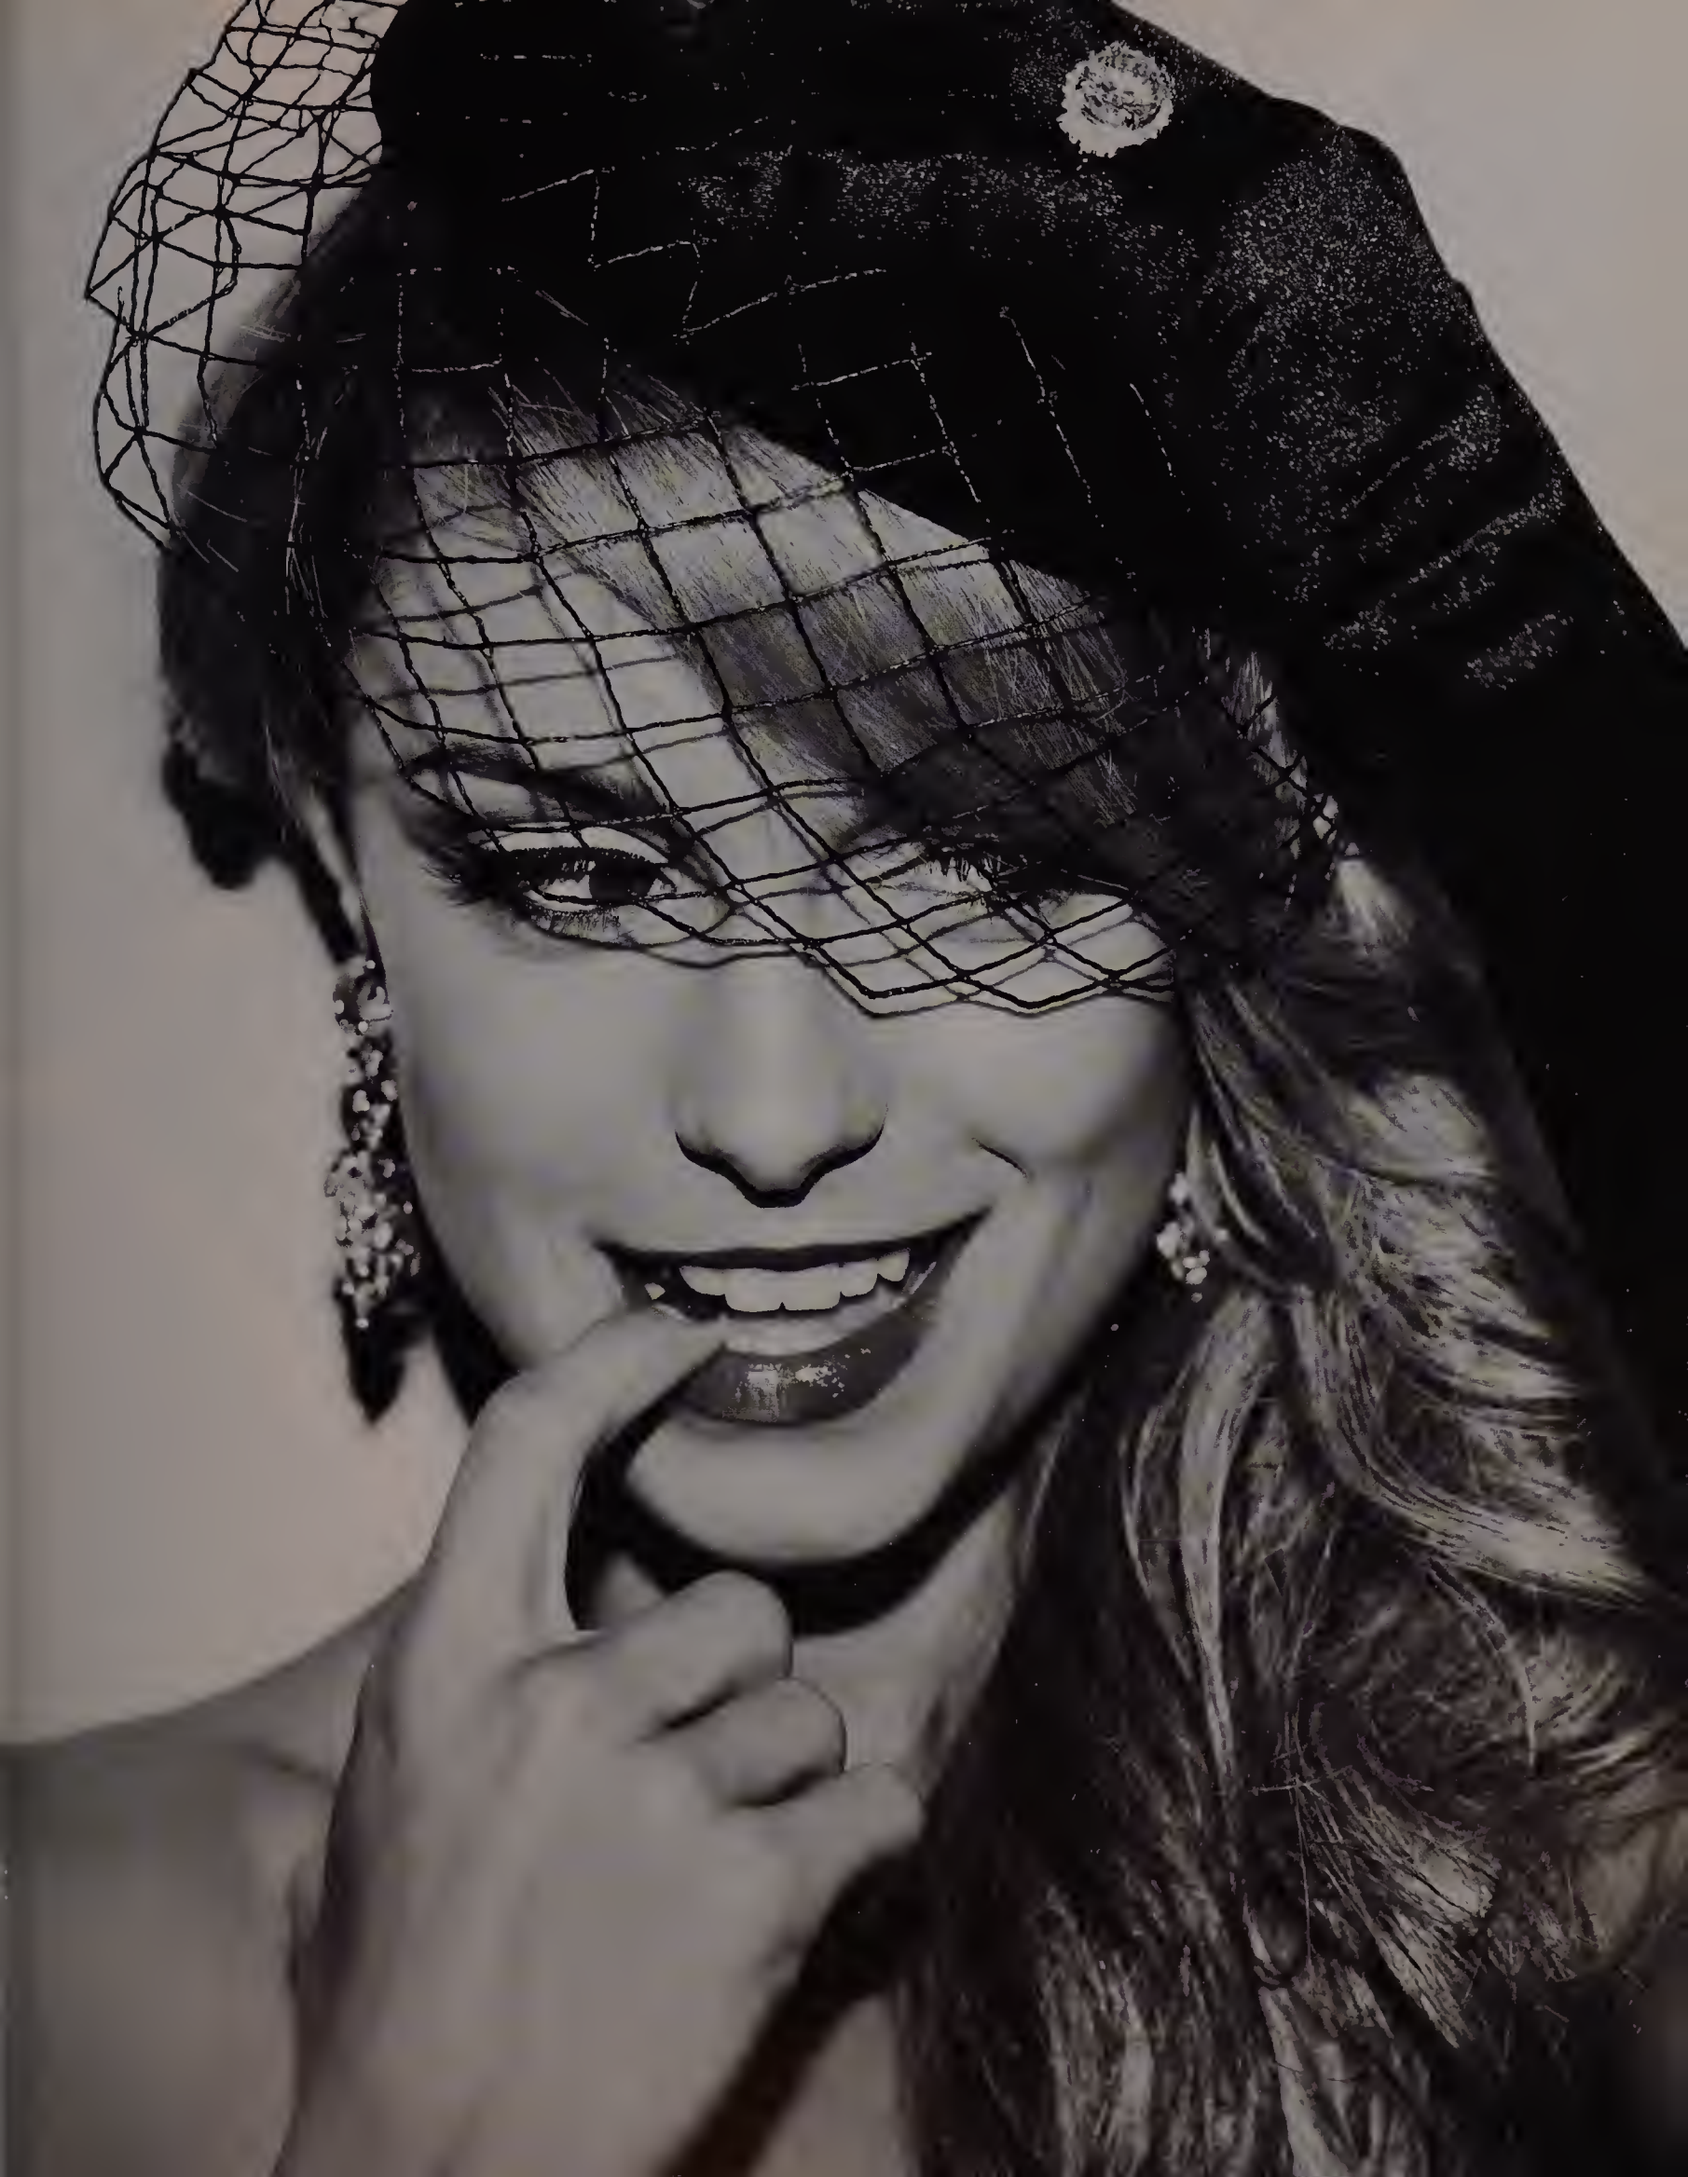
When it comes to football—college or pro? Oh, that's tough. I would have to say college. I love watching the NFL, and I loved working in it. But I love working in college football, because the fan base is really invested. They're really nuts. They're all there on Saturday to watch their classmates play or cheer for their alma mater. I also love covering college football because I can lie in bed all day Sunday and watch the NFL.

So you don't want to cover it anymore? It's not that. I covered the NFL last season. I'd just say covering college football is a little more exciting. These kids are fighting for a career. They're not getting paid. They're doing it for school pride and because their family and friends are watching. I've done so many interviews after games. With the NFL, I never saw tears, and I've probably seen tears three times already this season.

Biggest extravagance? Room service. On the road, my favorite thing is to get to my room, put on a robe and order room service. I'll spend all my money on that.

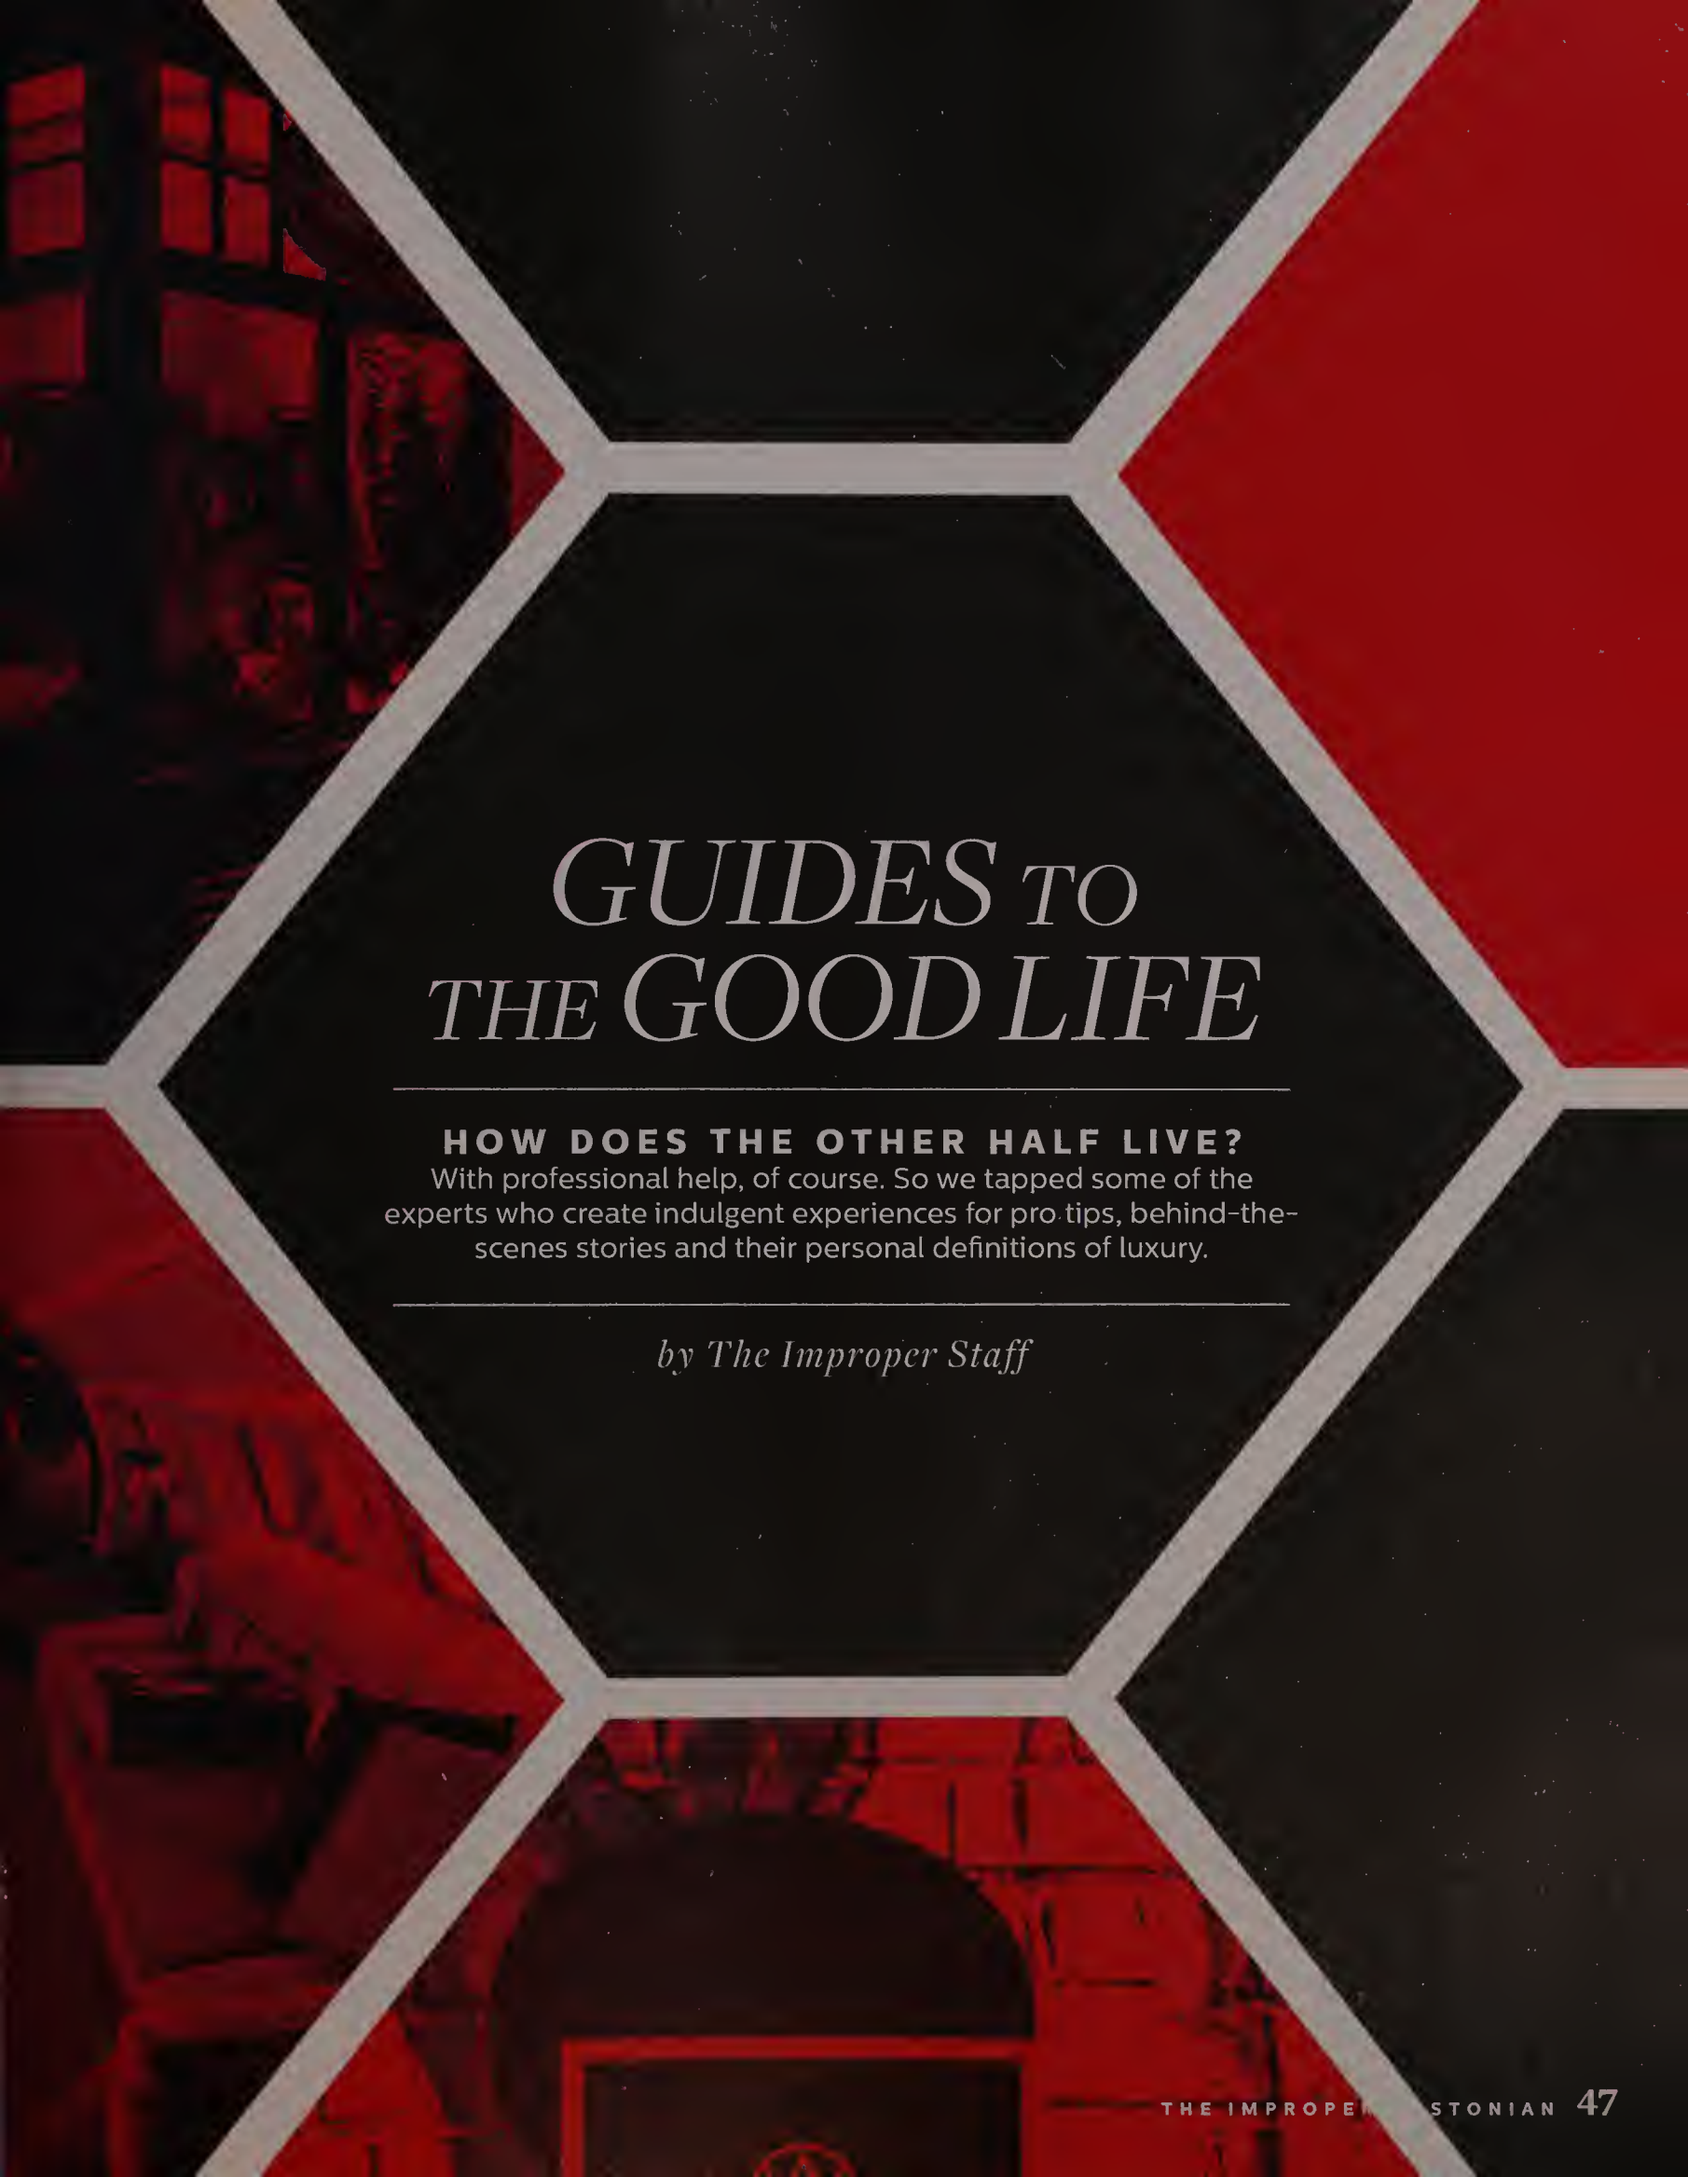
You're petite, and when you were covering the NBA, there were times when you were holding the microphone so far over your head it looked exhausting. I had to wear really tall shoes. I sometimes had to stand on a box. And I always got sweated on, because the players would have to lean down to try to hear what I was saying. All the sweat on their face would drip onto me, which was a little disconcerting, but kinda funny. I'm glad I don't have to deal with it anymore though.

Tell the truth: Were you a little miffed when Kevin Garnett grabbed your microphone and yelled, "Beantown!" No, I loved it. I love him. He's one of my favorite athletes, and he only does in-arena interviews maybe once a year, so I was just thrilled he did it. Moments like that are priceless, and fans, especially in Boston, love that stuff.



What about dealing with locker rooms? I don't go in locker rooms anymore, but in Boston, I had to every day, and I've gotta tell you something. NBA players are loud superstars, and people think of them as really showboaty. They're very modest in the locker room. Very shy. They'd shimmy their shorts up with a towel around them. I never had any awkward weirdness. They were always very polite.

So which is a better sports town: Boston or New York? I would obviously choose Boston. New York fans can be a little abrasive. Boston fans are just drunk and happy.



What do you want to be doing in 10 years? I would be blessed to be doing exactly what I'm doing now. But eventually, it would be nice to be an NFL sideline reporter, or someday to host my own show. That would be pretty cool. ◆

"You know the saying 'Those can't do, teach'? Those who can't play, report. I'm not athletic."

FIND THE PERFECT FIT...

with Right Up Your Ali, rightupyourali.com

After working at Chanel and Valentino, where clients relied on her for round-the-clock fashion advice, Ali Ehrlich left the corporate retail world to start styling solo. Now with her service Right Up Your Ali, this Boston-based personal stylist (and owner of a cat named Jimmy Chew) runs the gamut from closet organizing to wardrobe makeovers. And though she once arrived at an appointment via a client's private jet, she's just as comfortable shopping the outlet sales. "It makes people feel good about themselves," she says. "That's what I love."

On her youngest client, age 12: "She'd be in the fitting room crying...so the mother was like, 'Could you help her?'... It was such an ego-boosting experience for her, and it made me feel great. And it wasn't necessarily luxury. I took her to Abercrombie and Aeropostale and all these places in the mall, but to her she felt like a million bucks."

On the importance of closet organization: "It's more time-effective and cost-effective for them if I already know what's in their wardrobe, because I'm not going to lead them to yet another pair of black pants if they have 10 in there.... And a lot of the times there's Champagne or wine involved—we make it fun."

On ignoring fashion rules: "If it's quality and still in style and fits you, maybe it might need a shoulder pad removed or something, but I don't believe in getting rid of something just because it's old."

On her idea of luxury: "It all depends on where your mindset is at that time. It can be a broken-in pair of jeans; it can be a Birkin bag." ◆

SAVOR SOME RARE SCOTCH...

at Wink & Nod, 3 Appleton St., Boston (617-482-0117) winkandnod.com

In addition to crafting menus and training staff, Boston Nightlife Ventures beverage director Michael Boughton heads up the Scotch Club at Wink & Nod, alongside bar manager Brian Mäntz. Twenty dollars gets you a members-only coin and access to exclusive bottles, special events and talks with brand reps, and there's even an overseas trip to a distillery in the works. The club's ranks are currently full, but you can join the wait list—and Boughton gave us a taste in the meantime.

On his top-shelf stuff: "We're featuring rare bottles in the sense that nobody else has them on the shelf.... There are some really nice Ardbegs that are currently available but not fully showcased, [and] there are some nice Highland Park scotches that are not really seen at many other places. Every single distillery has some form of limited release or special product that's not really a day-to-day sell for them that we like to take advantage of and have fun with."

On advice for the novice: "I would recommend something a little lighter [that's] more approachable. Start off with blended scotches, even well-known names like Johnnie Walker or Chivas. Beyond that, single malts, which are highly coveted of the scotches, are what are used in those blends. It's nice to take a blended scotch and appreciate that for what it is, and then taste the single malt and deconstruct it to find why it tastes that way."

On stocking a home bar: "For a good representation of a nice Islay scotch—you know, smokier and peatier-style stuff—I would say Ardbeg. As for Highland, Macallan is always a great pour. [And] If you're looking for a good blend, Monkey Shoulder is really smooth, really well-rounded." ◆

HIT THE JACKPOT...

at Mohegan Sun, 1 Mohegan Sun Blvd., Uncasville, Conn. (888-226-7711) mohegansun.com

Lyndon Stockton has plenty of experience with high rollers, having worked in Atlantic City and the Bahamas, where he helped open Atlantis Resorts' Royal Towers and the Cove. Now as vice president of casino marketing at Mohegan Sun, which offers amenities like 24-hour butlers and complimentary rounds of golf, he aims to make all guests feel like they've won big.

On door-to-door service: "We have guests that come here that cannot land their jet at Groton's private aviation FBO because the runway is too small. So they land their jet at a private FBO at Hartford, and we have a Sikorsky helicopter pick them up and land them at our helipad, which is located at the entrance of our main casino. No one in the world can offer that kind of experience to a guest, only Mohegan Sun. I refer to us as the Beast of the East."

On catering to every whim, day and night: "We're the only casino that I know of in the country that has a private gaming room adjacent to the number-one suite product that we have within our hotel. Someone can wake up at 3 o'clock in the morning and have a propensity to want to wager high, and all they have to do is walk out of the double doors from the best suite we have here and walk five feet, and they can enter a private gaming room."

On meeting a real VIP: "The most memorable moment was receiving a call from the White House and personally coordinating all aspects of first lady Michelle Obama's visit with her children and watching the Beyoncé concert with them. It was something I will never forget—not only meeting them, but how wonderful and down to earth they are."

On his idea of luxury: "I enjoy playing golf.... But from a dining experience, going to Jean-Georges at 1 Central Park West and having a great dinner."

MARK AN EXTRA-SPECIAL OCCASION...

at the Four Seasons, 200 Boylston St., Boston (617-338-4400) fourseasons.com/boston

As the Four Seasons' catering manager for almost a decade, Robyn Yee knows a thing or two about crafting elegant events. Yee's job is all about making sure special occasions meet her clients' expectations—no matter how lofty they may be. Her favorite part of the gig? "Few people get to see someone's dream moments come true right before their eyes," she says. She does.

On lavish affairs: "Whether it's over-the-top flower arrangements draping every surface of our ballroom and corridors, or a six-course tasting menu for 150 people in [event space] Aujourd'hui, I always leave every event wondering how the next client will top the last—and they always do. One of the most memorable events saw our ballroom transformed into a 1960s diner, complete with checkered black-and-white floor, retro furniture and celebrity entertainers."

On extravagant requests: "Everyone in the luxury hospitality business has stories about challenging requests. Some are seemingly simple, like finding goat's milk for a small child with special dietary needs, while others might involve our entire staff, as we literally rolled out a red carpet for a single guest to access the elevator in VIP style."

On the little details: "It sounds cliche, but our staff has an amazing way of making every guest that comes to the hotel feel special. During a wedding, a mother of the bride mentioned her feet hurt from the shoes she was wearing. Moments later she noticed a pair of slippers under her chair. The server had gone to housekeeping to retrieve the slippers so the mother of the bride was more comfortable."

On her dream soiree, if money was no object: "My dream event would be in Spain surrounded by my closest friends and family. I picture a long wooden table in the middle of gorgeous villa, covered in traditional Spanish tapas, with lots of dancing throughout the evening. Sometimes less is more."

On throwing an elegant event on a budget: "Going with my philosophy that less is more, candles can have a huge visual impact and undeniably set the tone for a romantic evening. Substituting a lavish floral arrangement with a simple display of candles and a few bud vases can minimize the decor cost and still have precisely the effect needed. Substitute a variety of exquisite miniature desserts for a larger wedding cake—it saves money and gives your guests options. It's a win/win." ◆

at L.J. Peretti Co., 2 1/2 Park Sq., Boston (617-482-0218) ljperetti.com

Stephen Willett still remembers the Cuban cigar he had on Christmas Eve with his father many years ago. It was a Montecristo No. 2, and he got up from his chair dizzy with a "good buzz." Aficionados like him have kept L.J. Peretti Co. in the cigar and pipe business for 144 years. "We get guys from age 18 to 90," says Willett, who got his start there as a graduate student in 1970, returned to the biz about 20 years ago, and is now the president of Peretti's, which still makes hundreds of handcrafted pipes each year.

On matchmaking for his customers: "You can come in and try any type of tobacco that's open. There's probably 100 of them open, and you can sit in the back room, smoke it, and if you don't like it you can dump it out and try something else until we ascertain what your tastes are.... In terms of a cigar, we try to start people out on lower-end cigars because I don't want a customer to feel like he's been jammed up when he leaves. It's my job to find good $5, $6 cigars, not just good $15 or $20 cigars for my customers."

On whether Cuban cigars are worth it: "When a Cuban cigar is right, it is like no other cigar in terms of taste and strength. The problem is the best Cuban rollers have left Cuba and work for companies in the Dominican Republic and Nicaragua now. The second part of the problem is the ones you get now are not consistent. You might buy a box of 25 cigars and have 10 of them plugged.... There are many cigars that taste just as good if not better than Cubans. Guys who have to have Cubans, it's all about cachet. When I'm in Europe, I have a couple, but I've never had any that were that extraordinary that I thought I should get a box. When guys come to me and say they smoke Cubans, I give them a Fuente Don Carlos, a Casa Cuba, a stronger Davidoff."

On his personal tastes: "I'm more into pipes than cigars. I have more than 800 pipes personally, and about 600 of them were made by us, so I'm partial to those." ◆

at Gourmet Boutique, Westin Copley Hotel, 10 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-266-2906) gourmetboutique.net

Anya Zelfond has spent the past decade dealing in decadence at Gourmet Boutique, her Copley Square shop stocked from floor to ceiling with Caspian and American caviar, duck foie gras and single-origin chocolates. Her goal? "To inspire our customers to pause for a moment... to enjoy a piece of attainable luxury that gives your mind a moment of peace and pure pleasure." Like the 23k gold flakes she carries to gussy up martinis or champagne, this purveyor is all about the luxe touch.

On enjoying caviar: "Using proper utensils—such as mother-of-pearl spoons and caviar servers on ice—is essential. Eating caviar out of a jar right out of the fridge is also OK as long as it's not with metal utensils. Traditionally, you place a dollop of caviar on the top side of your hand, where the thumb meets the index finger, and taste the delicacy before combining it with blinis and crème fraîche and all the accoutrements found on menus of fine restaurants."

On identifying the good stuff: "I cheat before I taste chocolates—I smell them. If you sense, like, really sweet notes or vanilla, that's usually chocolatiers trying to cover up for something underneath. It's a cheaper way."

On her idea of luxury: "One of my favorite daily moments of indulgence is sharing a single-origin piece of dark chocolate—be it a filled bonbon or piece of chocolate made by a master chocolatier—with my daughter. This pause on life, this shared moment of indulgence, for me feels like the ultimate decadence." ◆

BRING ON THE BLING...

at Tiffany & Co., 5 Newbury St., Boston (617-217-5778) tiffany.com

This spring, group director Jennifer Sciolto will celebrate her 15th anniversary with Tiffany & Co.—a company that knows a lot about major milestones. "We get to celebrate engagements, the birth of a child, special birthdays," says Sciolto, who's even helped one gentleman hide 10 friends in the private sales room so the whole crew could join in a post-proposal Champagne toast. She paused from prepping for Tiffany's shiny new Newbury Street store, which opened Nov. 5, to drop some bling knowledge.

On her top styling tip: "Mixing metals is something that I'm a huge believer in. Years ago, people wouldn't even think of it. There are lot of purists out there who want to wear all white metals or yellow metals. Now, you can layer and stack and have all different elements. Our new Tiffany T collection, for instance, comes in four different metals: rose gold, yellow gold, white gold and sterling silver. And that part is exciting to me—just playing around with things and mixing them and having them mesh. A lot of people love layering a number of bangles, and even in regard to necklaces—having a 16-inch necklace but then layering it with something that's 30 inches and maybe something in between at 20 inches. I'll do that in my own personal style, and it's almost the more the better."

On jewelry TLC: "One easy thing is I do encourage all of our clients to come back, even if it's once or twice per year. I tell people, think of it like dry cleaning a really beautiful gown. You have to bring it in; you have to have someone professionally do that. It will really help maintain the life of your jewelry."

On a real breakfast at Tiffany's: "We did a donation for one of our top clients' charities last year; it was for a breakfast at Tiffany's at our flagship store, as well as a tour of our jewelry manufacturing studio, where the craftsmen are making these beautiful pieces. I just saw this client last week when we had a big event in New York. She had to pull me aside and tell me that the recipients of that breakfast were just blown away. And you can't just come into the store and buy that experience; it's not something that's for sale. She was able to bring her daughter, and it was so memorable that they're still talking about it a year later." ◆

ADD WOW TO THE WALLS...

at Erdreich White Fine Art, erdreichwhitefineart.com

"It's not like picking a phone system; it's a really intimate relationship," says Elizabeth Erdreich-White, who's developed art programs for clients from Merrill Lynch and Fidelity Investments to Aerosmith and Boston Ballet. But don't think the owner of Erdreich White Fine Art spends her whole day with bigwigs in boardrooms. "People might be surprised with the amount of time I spend in construction sites wearing a hard hat," she says. "Then the next thing you know, you're in this really formal office in New York City. Or I'm at my gallery moving paintings or in an artist's studio." She took time out of one of those peripatetic days to school us on the art market.

On her favorite clientele: "It's really the clients that get so engaged and excited that they really open themselves up to this exploration that enable us to excel.... A couple of years ago, we had a large corporate headquarters of a company whose entire space was idyllic landscapes, nauticals. They're OK, but they're fairly pedestrian. They went all out and really pushed themselves. We put in video art. We put in monumental sculpture—all abstract. We put in things made of metal and things made of wood. They're pieces that you could see in a museum; they're really spectacular. And they had the best time."

On the biggest mistake buyers make: "There is one thing that I seem to see over and over, and that's people who buy something because it's cheap. It's always what they get rid of. It's fascinating. I'm working with a client right now whom I've worked with for about 20 years. They're moving from 16 floors to a whole new office tower, so we're re-evaluating 800 pieces of art and planning for all the new art. And all the pieces they bought because they felt the need to fill space, everything they bought cheap, people have tossed."

On advice for art newbies: "A really good entry point for young or new buyers are the school art sales. A lot of cities don't have good art schools, but Boston has the SMFA sale, the MassArt sale; RISD does a sale. Those are opportunities where you're seeing artists that are on the trajectory to be the next well-represented artists. Those are places where artists are still pricing their own work. They don't have another person who's taken hold of them, and you can really get a lot of value for your money. And again, don't go with the side agenda of trying to find who's going to be the next artist and playing Larry Gagosian. You know, who cares? Find something you love."

On the art she'd most love to own: "I instantly can think of 40 names.... But there is a Spanish artist named Juan Muñoz, who regrettably died in 2001. He was only 48 years old, and his work I think is just so poignant and phenomenal, so he would top my list. I'd be happy with anything he ever made." ◆

CRUISE THE HIGH SEAS...

with Carol Kent Yacht Charters, carolkent.com

Marblehead's Carol Kent Yacht Charters sends clients all over the world, from the Mediterranean to the South Pacific islands. But for Midwesterners, sometimes the sights they want to see are what New Englanders take for granted: Nantucket, the Maine coast, Newport. Carol Kent has seen it all in her more than 25 years in the business, and she dished on some details behind six-figure vacations.

On her wildest client request: "It was down in the British Virgin Islands a couple of years ago, with a family on a 120-foot yacht. These folks were very particular.... They wanted a particular brand of caviar that they couldn't get, and they requested that the mates use a dinghy to go to St. Thomas and get that particular brand. And they did. They had to."

On the price tag: "It's usually from $90,000 to $300,000. I would say the largest amount spent on just a week was $200,000 to $250,000. I had one charter that was two people, a fellow and his mother. He had just sold his company, and his mother had always wanted to go to Greece. They had a 120-foot motor yacht to themselves.... This particular son and his mother, when they got back, entertained all the crew and their family. They paid for music and dancing and food."

On the most important part of choosing a charter: "The crew, the crew, the crew.... I've had people repeat two or three times because of the crew. Even if the crew has changed boats, they go with the crew. That's because they know each other. Some of the crew might have homes elsewhere, and they'll invite their charter guests to come visit them in the offseason. It's unlike a resort, where you're not quite connecting to the maid as much as you would to the stewardess who is bringing ice water to you at night on your mega-yacht." ◆

JOIN THE JET SET...

with Magellan Jets, magellanjets.com

Joshua Hebert, the CEO and founder of Magellan Jets, is well-versed in flying high. A former Wall Street exec, Hebert now pilots the Quincy-based private jet travel service, which recently unveiled its new Build-A-Card program. "We looked at technology in the automotive industry, specifically Mercedes, and saw how you can customize and build your car online," Hebert says. "In our business, no one has been able to customize a jet card with an online portal. The only way to do it was to call into the office and negotiate, but in most cases the high-end consumer did not know what options they had." (To have those problems, right?)

On why people fly private: "One reason people use private aviation is to get to numerous airports in one day and back home in time for dinner. Another concern is needing an air ambulance. When someone gets hurt in Aspen or cuts their leg on coral in Fiji, they want to know they have safe transportation to get them to help. We also transport clients who enjoy a cigar or smoking while traveling, which you cannot do commercially."

On famous clients: "One of the world's top pop stars is one of our most loyal customers. We won her loyalty by actually declining a trip for her during her tour. The flight she had scheduled was going to be flown by a flight crew who did not meet our safety standards. We told her we didn't feel comfortable booking the jet for her, but we could find one with the correct safety markings a few hours later.... At first her team was furious with us, but a few hours later realized we had her best interests, and safety, in mind."

On perks, perks, perks: "Pulling your car directly up to the plane, having your pilots take your luggage as you walk on the Magellan Jets red carpet, being greeted by your flight attendant with Champagne, and juices for your kids, catering from your favorite local restaurant—for instance, we flew someone out of New York last week, and they wanted Carnegie Deli sandwiches. We also had a customer who wanted French food from Gaslight Brasserie in Boston."

On furry passengers: "A lot of clients don't want their four-legged family members traveling in a cargo hold on commercial airlines, so we transport passengers and pets all the time.... There was also a time we flew a dog from New York to Hawaii all by itself. Lucky pup." ◆

IN THE NUDE

To get the matte finish that's been making rounds on runways, start with a gentle massage using a product like Dior Capture Totale Emulsion, which will bring out a natural glow and make your foundation look that much better. Then apply a moisturizer designed for oily skin, focusing on the T-zone. Next, using your fingertips, apply highlighter—we used Soap & Glory's Trick & Treatment—wherever you want brightness to come through (say, at the inner under-eye area, the center of the forehead and the center of the chin). Blend into the skin with a bit of concealer. Then apply a small amount of foundation evenly across the skin with a moist sponge. To set the look, roll your favorite powder brush onto a mattifying powder and press the product into the skin, starting at the areas where you get the shiniest, holding the brush there for a beat and then dusting the excess away. For a natural eye, use a neutral shadow and finish with mascara. Voila—a flawless daytime look that can be dialed up for evening, as the following pages show.

MARIO BADESCU CONTROL MOISTURIZER FOR OILY SKIN, $18 AT NORDSTROM; TRICK & TREATMENT IN "BRIGHT ON," $13.50 AT SOAP & GLORY; KEVYN AUCOIN SENSUAL SKIN ENHANCER IN "NO. 3" AND "NO. 5," $48 AT BLOOMINGDALE'S; MAC PRO LONGWEAR CONCEALER IN "NW20" AND "NC25," $20 AT MACY'S; DIOR CAPTURE TOTALE MULTI-PERFECTION EMULSION, $160, URBAN DECAY DE-SLICK MATTIFYING POWDER, $32, DIOR UNIVERSAL BROW PENCIL, $29, URBAN DECAY "NAKED BASICS" EYE SHADOW PALETTE, $29, DIORSHOW ICONIC OVERCURL MASCARA IN BLACK, $28.50, ALL AT SEPHORA

SMOKE SHOW

You'll need at least three shades of shadow to create this matte smoky eye. But first, reach for your concealer—many make a great primer for lids. Then apply eyeliner to the upper and lower lids as close to the lashes as possible, making the line thicker on the outer corner to create a cat-eye shape. (We used Urban Decay 24/7 Glide On Eye Pencil, which goes on creamy and dries for a long-lasting effect.) Blend the upper liner up toward the crease with a fluffy brush, and blend the lower liner with a smaller brush—about the size of a pencil eraser—for an even and diffused look. Next, using a flat brush, pack on the deepest shade of shadow to intensify the line. Then press the lightest shadow into the brow bone area to make a matte highlight below the eyebrow. Finally, with a fluffy blending brush, take the medium-toned shadow and apply with a windshield-wiper motion to the middle, blending the light and deep shadows. Then curl your lashes, finish with mascara and hit the town.

FIXX CREME MAKEUP IN "NEUTRAL LEVEL 1" AND "NEUTRAL LEVEL 3," $30 AT KETT COSMETICS; MAKE UP FOR EVER MATTE ARTIST SHADOWS IN EGGSHELL, VANILLA, GRAY BEIGE, GRAY BROWN AND NEUTRAL BROWN, $21 EACH, SMOKY EXTRAVAGANT MASCARA IN BLACK, $24, URBAN DECAY 24/7 GLIDE ON EYE PENCIL IN "DEMOLITION," $20, ALL AT SEPHORA

GLOSSED OVER

This slick take on a statement eye has some help from an unexpected source: lip gloss. You may already have something in your makeup bag that could work for this look, but remember that not all lip glosses are created equal, so avoid any products with menthol, mint or heavy fragrance, as these ingredients could irritate the eye. (And if you're still concerned, turn to companies like MAC that carry gloss specifically formulated for the eye area.) First, apply a vitamin E cream to eyelids for extra hydration, and use a highlighter on the undereye area to nix any discoloration—we suggest Dior's Skin Flash Booster Pen. Next, apply a soft long-wear eyeliner to the lower lid only, extending the line out like a cat eye. Then curl your lashes and apply mascara. Just before you arrive at your destination, put a pea-sized dollop of clear gloss on a fingertip and pat on the center of your lid. No need to blend, as natural blinking will do the job for you.

SMOKE AND MIRRORS

Glam holiday party on the horizon? Try combining the smoky and glossy techniques for this festive evening look. Use your fingertip to apply a copper shadow liberally to the eyelid, blending up toward the crease. Then pat on some shimmer all over the lid. (We used Make Up For Ever's Star Powder in Copper.) Using a clean blending brush, blend from the crease up to the brow bone. This brush should pick up any excess powder, creating a natural gradient of color. Add a pop of shine with the clear lip gloss for the finishing touch.

URBAN DECAY "NAKED" EYE SHADOW PALETTE, $54, MAKE UP FOR EVER STAR POWDER IN COPPER, $20, BOTH AT SEPHORA

METRO BOSTON'S SEASONALLY APPROPRIATE GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND PHILANTHROPIC EATS

Autumn Affair

A fall food fest.

TO BE HONEST, IF WE NEVER again tasted "pumpkin spice"—an experience that John Oliver recently compared to eating a candle—it would be too soon. However, we're fairly certain that there won't be any faux pumpkin concoctions among the many varied dishes at the 11th annual Flavors of Fall. Boston Chefs' annual culinary fundraising extravaganza features suitably autumnal dishes prepared by chefs from Cambridge restaurants, including Commonwealth, Harvest, the Sinclair, Belly Wine Bar and many more. And reps from vintners and brewers such as Richer Pour and Brooklyn Brewery will be on hand to keep the booze flowing and warm our rapidly chilling bones. Those who choose to roll VIP can hit up the food fest an hour early for cheese, wine and freshly shucked oysters from Island Creek—all the better to whet your appetite for the main event. Plus, all proceeds benefit local nonprofit drop-in center Youth on Fire, which gives us one more good reason to eat, drink and be merry this fall. / Alexandra Cavallo

THE 2014 FLAVORS OF FALL runs from 6:30 to 8:30 pm on Nov. 17 at the Royal Sonesta Hotel, 40 Edwin H. Land Blvd., Cambridge. $75, $125, VIP. flavors.bostonchefs.com.

ACT OF FAITH

Blood may be thicker than water—but it often seems like nobody can draw blood quite as expertly as family. Such is the case in SpeakEasy Stage Company's production of Bad Jews, Joshua Harmon's cutting one-act comedy that follows a pair of estranged cousins brought together by their grandfather's death. During the course of a night spent in the deceased patriarch's apartment, the two cousins—one devoutly religious, the other a lapsed Jew with a shiksa girlfriend in tow—clash over a cherished family heirloom and, more important, the vastly different ways they've chosen to identify with their heritage. Watch the ties that bind start to fray at Bad Jews, receiving its New England premiere through Nov. 29 at the BCA's Calderwood Pavilion. / Alexandra Cavallo

NIGHT AT THE MUSEUM

Prolific Boston-bred documentarian Frederick Wiseman is known for his fly-on-the-wall approach to filmmaking. And what's on the walls is pretty breathtaking in his latest film, National Gallery, which has Wiseman turning his signature gaze on the staff of the title London museum as they run one of the world's foremost cultural institutions. "There is almost no human experience that isn't in one of the paintings," Wiseman says in his film, which studies both the works of art and those who curate and care for them with a close eye. Get inspired at the Museum of Fine Arts, which is hosting screenings of National Gallery from Nov. 12 through Dec. 28. / Kim Lester

BIG HERO 6 ★★★ After the success of Guardians of the Galaxy, is it any surprise that the Disney-Marvel union has brought another lesser-known superhero team to theaters? What is surprising is that this computer-animated comedy/adventure is more a product of Disney's 'toon traditions than the comic books that spawned it. Directors Don Hall (2011's Winnie the Pooh) and Chris Williams (Bolt) have reworked their source material, retaining character names but little else. Essentially, this is the story of a boy and his 'bot: 14-year-old genius Hiro Hamada (voiced by Ryan Potter) and Baymax (30 Rock's Scott Adsit), the inflatable robot protector left behind by Hiro's brilliant older brother, Tadashi (Daniel Henney), after he perished in a blaze at his school in downtown San Fransokyo. A villain emerges, utilizing tech stolen from Hiro, snapping him out of the depression caused by his brother's death. Enlisting Tadashi's "nerd lab" friends—Go Go Tomago (Jamie Chung), Wasabi (Damon Wayans Jr.), Honey Lemon (Genesis Rodriguez) and Fred (T.J. Miller)—Hiro creates a team of comic-inspired heroes. Not quite The Incredibles, they're nevertheless credible as a source of family fun. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

BIRDMAN OR (THE UNEXPECTED VIRTUE OF IGNORANCE) ★★★ There's a gimmick in this new tour de force from Alejandro González Iñárritu, but it's not what you're thinking. Sure, Michael Keaton is terrifically ironic as Riggan Thomson—aka Birdman, a nod to his time as Batman more than two decades ago—a washed-up actor attempting a "serious" comeback on Broadway by writing, directing and starring in an ill-advised adaptation of Raymond Carver stories. No, it's the single-take illusion that Iñárritu and cinematographer Emmanuel Lubezki employ when it serves little dramatic purpose, especially given the amount of time compression (the movie is set during the course of about a week). Lubezki won an Oscar for the same trick in Alfonso Cuaron's Gravity, and initially it seems to fit the backstage feel, as if we're watching a play within a play—but moving outside the theater, the technique is a scream for attention. That's a shame, given the nice work by Edward Norton as the stage star who tries to overtake Riggan's production, an understated Zach Galifianakis as Riggan's friend and producer, and Emma Stone out-acting everyone as Riggan's assistant. She's also the possibly schizophrenic actor's recovering addict daughter, who falls for her father's nemesis. Yeah, the script's the weakest part. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

THE BOXTROLLS ★★★ Based on Alan Snow's children's novel Here Be Monsters!, this latest handcrafted marvel from the stop-motion animators at Laika studios is a darkly twisted look at the goings-on of the incredibly expressive inhabitants of Cheesebridge and their quirky underground counterparts: cave-dwelling trash collectors known as Boxtrolls. Mischievous creatures, they've raised an orphaned human boy named Eggs (voiced by Game of Thrones' Isaac Hempstead-Wright), a pawn in a convoluted plot hatched by the town's Mr. Creosote-like exterminator, Archibald Snatcher (Academy Award winner Ben Kingsley), to rid the land of these misunderstood, gibberish-spewing "monsters." How exactly Eggs has developed his Queen's English vocabulary is a mystery best not contemplated. Be sure to stay during the end credits for a behind-the-curtain look at some of the film's production art, plus a wonderfully self-referential sequence contemplating the existential link between the characters and their creators; if the rest of the movie had been half as clever, this might have stood as a worthy successor to Laika's ParaNorman and Coraline. As is, directors Anthony Stacchi and Graham Annable have created something that's merely better than most live-action productions. What nerve! (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

THE EQUALIZER ★★★ Your parents may have been fans of The Equalizer, the 1985-89 CBS series starring British actor Edward Woodward as a 60-something retired agent-turned-private detective, an avenging angel helping to equalize the odds against the downtrodden. But you might think twice about taking them to this excessively violent film that serves as the TV show's prequel, transplanting the action from the mean streets of New York to the meaner streets of Boston. Robert McCall, the stuffy suit- and overcoat-wearing Brit, has been reimagined as, well, Denzel Washington, an everyman-with-a-past who manages a Home Depot-like warehouse store that you just know will serve as the perfect location for an extended, bloody shootout. When McCall meets Teri (Chloë Grace Moretz), an underage prostitute controlled by Russian gangsters (led by Marton Csokas in a terrifically scene-chewing turn), he can idle no longer. Slickly helmed by Antoine Fuqua (who directed Washington in his Oscar-winning role in 2001's Training Day), this completely ridiculous entertainment even grants its star Terminator-like eagle vision. Your folks can keep their small-screen Equalizer; this big-screen update is a brutal blast. (At Boston Common, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

FURY ★★★ The latest work of nonstop brutality from writer/director David Ayer (End of Watch) begins with a lone figure emerging from the distance on horseback, an homage to the most famous shot in Lawrence of Arabia. David Lean's movie is a major work of art dealing with a complex man conflicted by his loyalties and the blood on his hands, while Ayer's, well, is not. It's macho porn, anchored by strong ensemble work (Brad Pitt, Shia LaBeouf and Logan Lerman star). It's also a feature-length merging of the unflinching assault on Normandy in Steven Spielberg's Saving Private Ryan with the violent climax of Sam Peckinpah's The Wild Bunch, a film Ayer had planned on remaking. However, between this movie and Sabotage, he's cribbed enough from Peckinpah's masterpiece that a remake would be redundant, much like this film, which stresses—again and again—the old trope that War Is Hell. It's 1945; Pitt's Sgt. Don "Wardaddy" Collier pulls the Nazi officer in the opening scene from his horse, stabbing the German repeatedly through his eye socket, before rejoining his five-man tank crew on their blood-soaked mission with destiny. Those with weak stomachs might want to skip the popcorn. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Gone Girl ★★1/2 Directed by David Fincher at his most coldly clinical, this wildly anticipated adaptation of the global bestseller by Gillian Flynn is faithful to a fault, lacking the lurid humor that would enliven such a potboiler. A handsome actor the media loves to hate, Ben Affleck is well cast as Nick Dunne, a man who's suspected of foul play when his seemingly perfect wife, Amy (Rosamund Pike), goes missing on the morning of their fifth wedding anniversary. Flynn adapted her own book for the screenplay, and while her material remains playful and increasingly ridiculous, it grows more and more tedious once the story opens up its secrets in the second hour and the fun drains out of the proceedings. This is the type of did-he-or-didn't-he movie that Michael Douglas used to star in as a matter of course—and Fincher even had success making one of these vehicles with Douglas when he directed 1997's The Game—but like Flynn's book, this film falters in its second half. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Assembly Row, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Judge ★1/2 Hank Palmer (Robert Downey Jr.) is standing at a urinal inside a Chicago courthouse when prosecutor Mike Kattan (David Krumholtz) storms in. Turning to face his opposition, Hank continues relieving himself. Soiled but undeterred, Mike demands to know how it feels to only represent people who are guilty. "Let me finish that cliche for you," Hank replies. "They're the only ones who can afford me." If only the cliches had ended there. Alas, the predictable formulas at play are made only slightly more palatable by Downey's acidic wit. Traveling home to Indiana after his mother suddenly dies, Hank must reluctantly defend his estranged father (played by Robert Duvall)—known simply as "Judge" to everyone in the community for his decades on the bench—when the arbiter is arrested after the funeral on suspicion of vehicular manslaughter... and possibly murder. Comedy director David Dobkin dives into dramatic territory here, but his heavy-handed examination of father/son relations belly-flops, ending up largely laughable. Between the diapers in his last picture, The Change-Up, and the incontinence here, he mostly excels when directing actors to bond over poop—or pee. Either way, it's a shitty, predictable business. (At Boston Common, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Listen Up Philip ★★★ Writer/director Alex Ross Perry is one to watch. His latest film, however, might not be. Depending on your tolerance for wholly unlikable assholes, you might steer clear of Philip Lewis Friedman (Jason Schwartzman), whose second novel is about to be panned in the Times. And he doesn't care. No one reads them anymore, anyway. (But does anyone read books?) He'll do everything he can to make you dislike him, then excuse himself with "I know, what an asshole." That includes picking up a girl nearly half his age—so what if he lives with his girlfriend, Ashley Kane (Elisabeth Moss), a photographer who supports him? OK, so Philip's surname might as well be Roth—if that role weren't already filled by his idol and new mentor, Ike Zimmerman (Jonathan Pryce). Perry's narrative even feels like it emerged from Roth's fingers, with its digressions for chapter-long stretches to focus on Ashley (in the present and in flashback) or on Ike, with Eric Bogosian narrating in Roth-like tones. Perry's last picture, The Color Wheel, was a masterpiece in miniature, while this is more ambitious. Not as successful maybe, but then, who needs to be liked? (At the Museum of Fine Arts.)

Love Is Strange ★★★1/2 In this compassionate portrait of the hardships faced by a couple finally married after nearly four decades together, John Lithgow and Alfred Molina bring real tenderness to their roles as Ben and George, a septuagenarian painter and a slightly younger music teacher at a Manhattan Catholic school. Rapidly, the two discover the meaning of "for better or worse." George is fired as a result of their union, forcing the two to sell the apartment they've shared for almost 20 years. Worse, they must live apart until they can find an affordable home. George moves in with a couple of NYPD officers (Manny Perez and Cheyenne Jackson) who live in their tenement, while Ben is taken in by his nephew (Darren Burrows) and his wife (Marisa Tomei), sharing a bunk bed with their territorial teenage son (Charlie Tahan). Separation takes its toll on the couple, and Lithgow is particularly fine as he quietly communicates his creeping realization that he's become a burden. Never dipping wholly into melodrama, this heartbreaker from director Ira Sachs casts its spell gradually, like the delicate Chopin that serves as the soundtrack. Lovely. (At West Newton.)

NIGHTCRAWLER ★★★ Dan Gilroy sure wishes it was 1976. The well-regarded screenwriter's first time in the director's chair finds him plumbing that year's Network for his less-than-insightful look at the media's lack of ethics. At a horrific crash scene, underemployed thief Louis Bloom (Jake Gyllenhaal) chances upon Joe Loder (Bill Paxton), a veteran "nightcrawler"—a freelance camera man who films accidents, fires and murders and tells our inquisitive antihero that "if it bleeds, it leads," a notion that was already old when Paddy Chayefsky penned Sidney Lumet's classic. Gilroy even hired his wife (actress Rene Russo) to recycle Faye Dunaway's role as a ratings-starved TV news executive, completing the family affair by employing brothers Tony (his producer) and John (his editor) to aid in his slick, derivative production, which is elevated by a wonderfully wormy performance by Gyllenhaal. Having dropped 30 pounds so his eyes pop from his gaunt, haunted face, Gyllenhaal adopts a manner that recalls Robert De Niro's Travis Bickle, another morally bent antihero who originated in '76, in Martin Scorsese's Taxi Driver. True, Gilroy's picture springs from the spare parts of better films, but its dark humor stings timelessly. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

PRIDE ★★★ If theater director Matthew Warchus' film only relied on the laughs mined from buttoned-up British thespian Imelda Staunton asking hilariously candid questions about homosexuality, it'd be worth a recommendation. But actor and first-time writer Stephen Beresford's shamelessly manipulative script also includes enough kitchen-sink realism to earn its tears. An earnest crowd-pleaser that avoids veering completely into sentimentality, the film relates the true events surrounding the 1984 formation of a London-based group of gay and lesbian activists who raised money to support the striking National Union of mineworkers and their families in the Welsh countryside. It features a wonderful cast, including Bill Nighy as a shy veteran miner, Paddy Considine as the union rep who welcomes the group to a town that initially doesn't know what to make of their new friends, and Dominic West as one of the first men in the U.K. to be diagnosed with HIV. Margaret Thatcher's England was a tough place for many, but these two groups of unlikely bedfellows discovered that standing together made for the strongest union of all. (At Coolidge Corner, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

THE SKELETON TWINS ★★★ Recognizing that there's often an air of sadness to former Saturday Night Live player Kristen Wiig's performances, director Craig Johnson and his co-writer, Mark Heyman, fashioned this comic drama involving chronic depression around the actress's hilariously melancholy talents. When we first see Wiig's Maggie, she's about to swallow a fistful of pills, but she's stopped by a phone call informing her that her fraternal twin, Milo (Wiig's longtime SNL cast mate Bill Hader)—a self-described "tragic gay cliche"—has just attempted to end his life. It would be easy to dismiss Hader's performance as a feature-length version of his "Stefon" character, but there's a depth to Milo that cuts deeper than the slits he's carved into his wrists. Nevertheless, some of Stefon's gleefully warped sensibility surfaces in Milo's suicide note, which reads, "To whom it may concern: see ya later," punctuated with a smiley face. And really, that about sums up the film's formula; it goes into some dark corners, but it always emerges in a happier place. As much as Milo and Maggie try to sabotage everything good and stable, it's their laughter that guides them—and us—through. (At Coolidge Corner and Somerville.)

ST. VINCENT ★★1/2 Bill Murray's a national treasure, and he's reliably great as Vincent, the hedonistic, misanthropic curmudgeon in Theodore Melfi's coming-of-age tale, where he becomes the unlikely mentor to Oliver (Jaeden Lieberher), a polite 12-year-old who's just moved in next door with his single mother, Maggie (Melissa McCarthy). But let's face it: Remove Murray from the film and you're left with sentimental formula. Nevertheless, Murray elevates the formula tremendously, and he has a real chemistry with newcomer Lieberher. Remarkably, McCarthy plays the material straight, dialing her notable comic instincts way down as a put-upon mom barely holding things together. Likewise, Naomi Watts plays well against type as a run-down, pregnant Russian hooker named Daka, who accompanies Vincent and his young charge as they go about the retired war veteran's daily routine at the race track, the local dive bar and the strip club where Daka works despite her baby bump. Not quite the saint of the title, Vincent's a good man nevertheless. But would you let this drunk babysit your kid? (At Assembly Row, Boston Common Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

THE THEORY OF EVERYTHING ★★★1/2 There's more to Stephen Hawking than the

Whiplash ★★★1/2 Even before the film's title comes into focus on the black screen, a quickening beat from a snare drum compels your attention, building with military precision until it ends with an echo, as if a muted gunshot has gone off. But there are no weapons deployed in writer/director Damien Chazelle's picture—only psychological warfare, focused on Andrew Neyman (Miles Teller), a 19-year-old drum prodigy in his first semester under Terence Fletcher, top conductor at Manhattan's Shaffer Conservatory, a fictionalized version of Juilliard. Menacingly portrayed by J.K. Simmons, Fletcher is seductive and terrifying, making Vern Schillinger, the Detroit native's character on HBO's Oz, look like Mr. Holland. Neyman pushes himself so hard for his taskmaster that his hands become raw and bloodied; Chazelle's drama nearly doubles as a horror film, with Neyman a man driven to kill, his drum set the victim. Like a great jazz riff, Whiplash becomes a series of variations on a theme, as the student fails to live up to his—or his teacher's—standards. And like many a great jazz song, the movie is sometimes unwieldy, but it builds to a hugely satisfying, electrifying finish. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

FREE SPIRIT When the name on your birth certificate reads Neon Hitch, perhaps it's predestined that you're going to be in show business. More specifically, in the case of the British singer/songwriter, in the business of making slick, dance-friendly electro-pop. Best known for her bouncy covers of hits like the Spice Girls' "Wannabe" and Miley Cyrus' "We Can't Stop," plus her soulful turn on Gym Class Heroes' Billboard chart-topper "Ass Back Home," Hitch is ready for her own spotlight, fresh off recording her debut album, Electheromaniac, which means "mad for freedom." It's an apt name, as Hitch bypassed major labels, crowd-funding the record through Indiegogo under the hashtag #WeRNeon. Break free with Neon Hitch at the Middle East Upstairs on Nov. 19. / Katie Smith

Edited by Sarah Hagman

SKIN DEEP People rarely fit neatly into bureaucratic categories, which is perhaps why, when given the chance to identify their own skin color in a 1976 census, Brazilians responded with 136 distinct and inspired answers one wouldn't even come across in a jumbo box of Crayola crayons. From sapecada (flirting with freckles) to café com leite (coffee with milk), the terms inspired Adriana Varejão's self-portrait series Polvo, making its way to the Institute of Contemporary Art this month along with other paintings, photography, sculptures and installations that explore her native Brazil's cultural history. The Rio de Janeiro-based artist's work has traveled everywhere from Australia to Japan to France, and her first U.S. solo show colors the ICA from Nov. 19 through April 5. / Sarah Hagman PHOTO: JAIME ACIOLI

RIOT ACT

In 2012, a protest turned music video got three members of Russian feminist punk outfit Pussy Riot thrown in prison, sparking worldwide outrage and starting a conversation on Vladimir Putin's policies, free speech and women's rights. Now they're free, but the collective has no intention of turning down the volume. In her new book Words Will Break Cement: The Passion of Pussy Riot, journalist Masha Gessen offers a peek behind those neon balaclavas, drawing on in-depth interviews with band members and their families to explore their unique brand of in-your-face activism. Rally your friends when Harvard Book Store brings Gessen to the FPC Parish House on Nov. 12. / Grace Rasmus

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

WARNING: BAD CHINA METAPHOR

It might be part of the Lenox Hotel, but The Dome Room is more like a giant Wedgewood teapot, especially when decked out in blue for Tailored on the Town. A fundraiser for Tailored for Education—which provides school uniforms in developing countries where they're mandatory—the event was hosted by founders Megan Kelly and Jessica Roy and had an A-list committee that included the holy quintet of gorgeous blondes: Linda Holliday, Beth Dickerson, Laura Baldini, Elisha Daniels and Sue Brady. Guests were treated to a blue candy buffet and a performance by superstar-in-progress Shea Rose, and the evening's funniest remark came from co-host Kristen Daly, who said, "At this point in the evening, we're hoping you're high enough on sugar and booze to write us a check."

"HEY!" IS FOR HORSES

Probably not since the abolition movement has there been so much shushing in an overheated Beacon Hill drawing room, but the Friends of the Boston Park Rangers Mounted Unit held an otherwise lovely gathering at the Parkman House.

Stationed outside on Beacon Street was the unit's newest steed, Otis, while inside was the benefactor who named him, Maggie Ahearn, along with the likes of Brahmin do-gooder Henry Lee, Chestnut Hillion Molly Dunne, animal activist Amber D'Amelio, the dashing Cort Davies, the always dapper Alan Rouleau, party in a little black dress Connie Brown, and two prominent women who got into a hissing match out in the hallway.

The evening's best remark came from the man who forgot his wallet and needed to borrow money for parking from a friend. After being handed $12 in singles, he said, "Looks like I ruined your night at the strip club."

ONCE UPON A TIME

The Storybook Ball looms so large in Boston's psyche that it's difficult to believe it was only founded 15 years ago. The fundraiser for Mass General Hospital for Children, which this year had a Willy Wonka theme, is so splashy it induces Veruca Salt-style bitchery among some people, namely the ones who are jealous they didn't win a golden ticket. Regardless, it's one helluva party.

This year, guests were greeted at the Park Plaza Castle with bubbles percolating from every corner, kaleidoscopic decor (and food) in insanely trippy colors and a high-stakes arcade that included games like a life-sized version of Operation!, manned by some pretty legit-looking Oompa-Loompas.

Present and accounted for: legendary singer/songwriter James Taylor and the swanlike Kim, brunette beauty Linda Pizzuti Henry and her handsome other half, John, naturally sweetened knockout Adriana Ardila Hassan and her dashing husband, Tarek, unfairly attractive couple Katherine and Ian O'Keefe, fashion plate Remy Schaefer Stressenger, flawless rosebud Alyson Lindsey and the debonair Jeff, the red-hot Rachel Hanselman, Caribbean queen Colette Phillips, the divine Mrs. Ribakoff (aka Patty) and the super-suave Charles, civic leader Joyce Zakim (who arranged to have the bridge named after her late husband specially lit in the evening's honor), no fewer than seven Bruins' wives sitting at the same table and pretty much everyone with juice in this town.

Overheard by the bar: "Were you just making out with my wife?"

"Yes...Somebody has to."

KNICK KNACKS 'R' US

There's an old joke about a Boston grande dame who didn't know that people bought antiques because she assumed everyone simply inherited them. And yet the Gala Preview for the Ellis Boston Antiques Show, held at the Cyclorama, has always attracted blue bloods who have room (and the budget) for things like a $450,000 19th-century Parisian street scene.

That said, this year skewed a bit younger and sexier, with such bewitching creatures as Russian femme fatale Elena Super, Colombian superman Jaime Diaz, San Francisco-based designer to the stars Steven Favreau and his other half, Gary Decad, with their adorable Havanese, Hubble, the devastatingly handsome duo of Jason DeMello and Bill Coombs squiring the delightful Joanne Tamasi, Back Bay nabobs Mark and Joyce Goldweitz, Beacon Hill party pair Biddy and Bob Owens, the unsinkable Mary Kakas and one person who said, "I've been to every Ellis since the first one in 1962."

One absent tradition lamented by some guests was the legendary raw bar, but there was plenty to nosh on (including oysters Rockefeller), and attentive bartenders kept booze flowing to aid the oohing and ahhing over priceless collectibles. One woman summed it up: "I need everything in here to decorate the French Norman chateau I'll never own." ◆

'TIS THE SEASON

TURKEY GETS ALL THE GLORY THIS TIME of year, but let's face it: That beautifully burnished bird is a bit of a diva, demanding hours of labor and getting gobbled up in a matter of minutes. And she's not exactly the kind of guest you invite to the season's more casual get-togethers. So for our Holiday Entertaining issue, Elizabeth Bomze instead spotlights the hors d'oeuvres that can get any party started, rounding up standout cheese, charcuterie and seafood bites from New England producers—none of which, I'm pleased to report, requires slaving over a hot stove.

Good booze is, of course, another sure way to start a party, so Scott Kearnan offers a guide to seasonal drinking, tapping top bartenders for crowd-pleasing punches, hot drinks for cold nights and post-prandial potables to follow big holiday meals. Head to Improper.com to find their gift picks as well. Alix Childs also offers some inspiration on that front, curating a bar cart with help from a local event expert.

Elsewhere, Jonathan Soroff interviews Emerson alum Matt McGorry, the up-and-coming actor who's landed roles on both How to Get Away with Murder and Orange Is the New Black. Matt Martinelli, meanwhile, checks in with the city's new chief of arts and culture, who fields questions submitted by Boston arts pros. And Austyn Ellese Mayfield catches up with a local fitness guru who's launching her own line of leggings, should you want to work off those holiday feasts... or, you know, just lounge around in comfy leggings. No judgment here.

TAKING SHAPE

Posterior Motives

WHEN PERSONAL TRAINER Kelly Brabants launched her eponymous fitness and lifestyle brand Booty by Brabants last year, the North Easton native found herself teaching the class of her dreams—in workout gear she hated.

"A lot of the activewear on the market just didn't have the stretch I needed," recalls Brabants, whose trademarked rump-roasting cardio class blends Brazilian dance, classical ballet and kickboxing. "I'd have clients stop in the middle of a squat to pull up their pants or take a break because they had a huge wedgie. Nobody likes it, but that's what's available."

Brabants aims to change that. With the popularity of her classes at an all-time high—even the Associated Press recently popped by for a trend piece—the fairy godtrainer to Boston's superlative derrières is adding apparel to the lineup. Her first offering: leggings manufactured in her mother's hometown of Rio de Janeiro.

Made from fast-drying, super-breathable material, the leggings are designed to be durable (enough to handle the class's 120 squats) and stylish too, with a body-flattering construction that comes in nearly a dozen colors, including "Acai" (dark purple) and "Copacabana" (deep blue).

"So often people look like robots at the gym. Everyone is wearing the exact same thing," Brabants says. "Brazilian women don't do cookie cutter: It's about vibrancy and expressing your individuality."

If the popularity of the first lot is any indication, Brabants may have struck gold with her clothing debut. She sold 15 pairs from her gym bag in 10 minutes after a Saturday class. All 30 were gone by the day's end, leaving some counting down the days until the early December launch of her e-commerce site at BootyByBrabants.com.

But for Brabants, the bottom line isn't strictly financial: Inspiring confidence in her students is the greater goal. "Sometimes people imagine every woman you'd pass on the streets in Rio must look like Gisele Bündchen, but it's not like that," she says. "Brazilian women aren't perfect—but they embrace what they have. People are healthy, but they don't obsess, because they'd rather enjoy life. I've applied that approach to my fitness brand, and it's that same fun and positivity I try to bring into the apparel." / Austyn Ellese Mayfield

Q&A
THE REAL DEAL

Bravo titan Andy Cohen is as adept at wrangling tipsy Housewives as he is at interviewing the likes of Oprah. Such exploits form the basis of his new memoir, The Andy Cohen Diaries. We tapped him for dirt before his Dec. 4 chat with The Improper's Jonathan Soroff at the Leventhal-Sidman Jewish Community Center. / Alexandra Cavallo

TELL US A BIT ABOUT THE BOOK. It's a year in my life. It's inspired by The Andy Warhol Diaries, which is the most incredibly name-droppy account of his life....He was rubbing elbows with all of these bold-faced names, and it just seemed so cool. So I realized last year that I go out every night, I'm rubbing elbows with all of these people ... I'm going to take this inspiration and see if I can do my own version of it. So I wrote an incredibly name-droppy and incredibly fun account, from September to September.... There's a lot of Bridget Jones's Diary in there. There's a lot of dating. I rescue [a] dog and wind up falling in love with the dog instead of a person—but I'll take what I can get.

I SEE THAT. THE BRAVO EMPIRE IS A BIT LIKE YOUR VERSION OF HIS WACKY FACTORY... I totally agree. He loved the high and the low, and I do too. I love the Housewives and I love Meryl Streep, and they're all on my show. I always thought that Warhol loved making real people famous, and I feel like I love the same thing. I think Warhol would be painting the Housewives if he were alive.

WHO WOULD BE A DREAM GUEST FOR WATCH WHAT HAPPENS LIVE? I think probably Michelle Obama or Madonna.

LET'S PLAY A QUICK ROUND OF "PLEAD THE FIFTH." FIRST, WHO'S THE WORST GUEST YOU'VE EVER HAD? I plead the fifth!

NOW YOU HAVE TO ANSWER THE NEXT TWO! WHO DO YOU THINK IS THE MOST OVER-RATED CELEBRITY? Probably Kim Kardashian. I've met her and she's really nice... but I think if you're looking for wit and humor in the Kardashian family, it's all about Khloé.

ON THAT NOTE, WHAT'S YOUR OPINION OF KIM'S FAMOUS...ASSET? I think it's round and really enormous. I took a butt selfie with her on my show that was reprinted everywhere. People love her butt. My mom talked to me after and said, "Your father can't stop talking about her ass!" It's so funny.

BRIGHT LIGHTS, NEW CITY: For more from Burros on her new gig, go to improper.com.

TAKING CENTER STAGE

LOCAL ARTS PLAYERS QUIZ BOSTON'S INCOMING "ARTS CZAR" ON HER PLANS FOR THE CITY.

AFTER MONTHS OF SEARCHING, Boston found its chief of arts and culture—the first such cabinet-level role in 20 years. Julie Burros, previously the director of cultural planning in Chicago, will have her first day as the city's "arts czar" on Dec. 15. Ahead of her arrival, we tapped local arts pros for questions to pose to Burros. / Matt Martinelli

WHAT EXCITES YOU THE MOST ABOUT YOUR NEW ROLE? (From Summer Williams, co-founder of Company One) Julie Burros: "I'm really excited about the opportunity to innovate how the municipal government supports the arts. That's exciting to me. I'm not filling anybody else's shoes, so I get to rethink and reinvent a little bit what the role of government is in supporting the arts. I'm also very excited about the vitality of the city. Boston is bursting with energy and growth."

WHAT ARE THE TOP STEPS YOU HAVE SEEN CHICAGO TAKE THAT IMPROVED THE CLIMATE FOR ARTISTS, MUSICIANS AND CREATORS? (From Roger H. Brown, president of Berklee College of Music) "I do want to caveat that just because something worked in Chicago or another city doesn't mean it's the right solution for Boston. But there are some really cool programs I've seen be impactful. One is called Arts in Sacred Places. It's a program from a group called Partners for Sacred Places, where they actually do training, capacity building and matchmaking between arts organizations and congregations. It really focuses on space utilization.... I know space is a big issue in Boston, so that's a really cool thing I'd like to take a look at and see if it's a fit for Boston. There's also something called the Chicago Artists Resource website, and it's very impactful for creative people of all sorts in helping them find resources and connecting. It was started by an agency I worked at and then spun off to a nonprofit."

HOW OFTEN WERE YOU ABLE TO SEE PLAYS/OPERAS/CONCERTS/ART SHOWS IN CHICAGO? (From Christie Gibson, director of OperaHub) "I love, love, love going to see culture and theater and music. I'm squeezing in some last little trips to some of my favorites in Chicago. I would say I average about two to four a week—so a lot. I'm hoping my schedule will permit it. And I really have to see the product and experience it firsthand in Boston, so people are going to see my smiling face in a lot of Boston venues."

WHAT WOULD BE YOUR ADVICE FOR A STARTUP ART GALLERY TO BE SUCCESSFUL? (From Nicole Dessingue and Amyko Ishizaki, co-directors of ARCH Gallery) "There's a lot of people for whom I think the collecting process needs to be demystified. Galleries can do a lot to be welcoming of people who are not already in the mix, or might not ordinarily go to art galleries. I think people are a bit unsure and wonder, 'Can I go? What's going on?' The art community—already you've got them. But what about other people? It's a complicated issue."

DOES YOUR APPOINTMENT MEAN THAT BOSTON WILL BE INCREASING ITS CURRENT LEVELS OF ARTS FUNDING? (From Mikko Nissinen, artistic director of Boston Ballet) "The first thing we're going to do is a cultural plan. There's lots of evidence that shows the funding for arts and culture does increase after you do a cultural plan. We really need to do the groundwork. What's the strategy? What are our goals? How well do we work together? Then we can start to really understand what the funding is that we need to move the needle and get what we want. So, big picture I'm very much looking to grow the resources dedicated to arts and culture."

FEW WORDS: The Jamaica Plain shop will be one of a handful of independent Boston bookstores.

Purveyors: Hit the Books

If you're looking for a shop to pop into on Small Business Saturday, consider Papercuts. On Nov. 29, owner Kate Layte will throw open the doors for the first time at her new JP book shop, a project she started dreaming up when she worked in the editorial department at Little, Brown. The indie bookstore will "fill a void" as one of just a few in Boston, says Layte, who's worked in the book industry for more than a decade. The store will house a broad range of fiction, nonfiction, graphic novels, journals and cards, not to mention a selection of local art. / Elizabeth Bomze

CULT FAVE

It's a familiar tale: Indie upstart develops a devoted following, gets bought by a corporate behemoth and loses some of its luster. Case in point: Hard Candy, the '90s darling that brought bright new hues to nails, only to wind up lining the aisles at Walmart. But now Dineh Mohajer—who founded the brand as a college student after getting props for the sky-blue shade she hand-mixed to match her sandals—is back in the spotlight with Smith & Cult, her new line of 30 polishes that recently hit shelves at Shag. They range from "a simple and elegant shade like Stockholm Syndrome," a goes-with-everything greige, "all the way to the glitter bomb that is Vegas Post Apocalyptic," says Shag manager Lauren Sinclair. "We can barely keep it on the shelves!" she adds of the latter, a glimmering lavender. As for her personal fave? "Chances are you will catch me rocking Lovers Creep," a holiday party-perfect Bordeaux. / Jacqueline Houton

LOADS OF CRAP

TO THE CREEP DRIVING HOME FROM WORK: When someone is trying to cross the road with crutches, the polite thing to do is to let them go, not stare at them and proceed to yell, "You're a hot cripple!" I appreciate the compliment, but I would have appreciated you stopping to let me cross the street more. Where are all the nice people?

— Very flattered cripple

DEAR CHATTY: It's sort of funny how a conversation can start about the oddest things. In this case, it was about exchange rates over the years between Canada and Europe. But it was great to hear you talk about Ireland, Colorado and all the other places you've been. Actually, you made me feel really good by reaching out to me at all given how disconnected we, as humans, can be from each other on the T and in the street here. (And given how I was just your average yuppie and you had such a colorful dress and tattoos.) You were so vivacious and full of life that I forgot I was in Boston! I wish I didn't have to get off at Mass. Ave. I wanted to get to know you way more.

— Yuppie love

TO ALL LANDLORDS WHO ADVERTISE "HEAT INCLUDED" IN THE COST OF THEIR RENTALS: Turn it on already! It is barely 60 degrees in my apartment that "includes heat." Last year, my landlord finally turned it on during the first week of November. How about this—set the thermostat (that is in the cellar behind a locked door) at 68 degrees, and it will automatically turn on when it gets cold outside. By law, a landlord must keep his or her apartments at 68 degrees from Sept. 15 to April 15. Calling the mayor's hotline does nothing—we tried that all last winter, to no avail. My guess is that where my landlord resides, the heat has been on for a few weeks and it's nice and toasty.

— Chilly in JP

TO THE WOMAN IN EAST BOSTON WITH THE POM-POM HAT, WALKING A BIG BLACK DOG: As I looked out my window to look at the beautiful Boston skyline and smooth waves of the ocean, I saw you walking by. You stopped; your dog sniffed, then dropped a big poo, as big dogs do. You pulled out your plastic bag and picked up the poo. Bravo! Then you proceeded to the closest drainage sewer and stuffed the bag down it. What were you thinking, idiot? This water drains to Boston Harbor, and the sewers are clearly marked "Do Not Dump!" Do the math: Two poo bags a day equals 60 bags of poo a month. Yuck! Smarten up and keep your shit to yourself.

MEAT THE CHALLENGE: BISq chef Dan Bazzinotti is whipping up a menu that's heavy on charcuterie to pair with the wine program.

WINE AND DINE

BERGAMOT'S SIBLING ISN'T MESSING AROUND WHEN IT COMES TO VINO.

BISq
1071 Cambridge St., Cambridge

THE EVER-AFFABLE SERVIO GARCIA pulls no punches when talking about wine bars. In the Bergamot GM and co-owner's mind, nothing in the Boston area meets his vision of what a wine bar should be. But Garcia and Bergamot chef/co-owner Keith Pooler plan to change that with BISq—short for Bergamot Inman Square—a wine bar slated to open in mid-December.

"I wonder, when I go to these places, what are you trying to achieve? Are you a bar or a wine bar or a lounge?" Garcia says. "I think a wine bar should be focused on the wines and offer a wide selection, giving people the opportunity to try different wines."

Kai Gagnon, wine director at Bergamot, will oversee the program at BISq, and he's filled the list with wines from Northern France as well as Austria and Germany. BISq will not only serve full and half glasses of wine, but half-bottle portions of selections usually sold by the bottle. The staff will also aim to add a little flair to the proceedings, sabering one bottle of wine each night.

The wine also makes its way into the decor, with bottles studding an accent wall and hanging overhead in a chandelier. The 49-seat space is divided into a back barroom and a front dining room with high-tops, banquettes and counter seating for eight overlooking the open kitchen. Hardwood floors and brick walls make for rustic ambience—the right fit for a wine bar, Garcia says.

"I think of the winemaker, with his overalls, spending all day in the sun and working the earth and the grapes and the vines. So that's why we're trying to achieve something more rustic and appropriate for the winemakers," Garcia explains. "And the food has the flavor and character to go well with wine."

Pooler says that food will include lots of charcuterie, with dishes like rabbit and foie gras sausage drawing raves at recent preview dinners. There will also be menu sections for bread and salad, seafood, other seasonal small plates (mostly priced at $8-$10) and a dessert program centered on trifles served in old-timey sundae glasses. Helming the kitchen will be Bergamot sous-chef Dan Bazzinotti, who, along with Gagnon, really provided the inspiration for the second restaurant.

"Bergamot is small. So the opportunities to grow are very minimal. Once you get to a certain position, there's no way up unless you buy the restaurant. So we didn't want to lose these people," Garcia says. "We wantcd to find a concept that could work around them, so we decided to do a wine bar with small plates and charcuterie. The reason why is because Dan loves that kind of food, and Kai's passion is wine."

ZO KNOWS

AS NEW UPSCALE "AUTHENTIC" Mexican restaurants open everywhere from downtown Boston to suburban shopping malls, it's time to take a fresh look at Zocalo. Twenty years ago, the original Zocalo was a Mexican taqueria in Somerville, "a hole-in-the-wall with three tables," remembers Ricardo Ramos, who co-owned the place with his brother Erwin. It wasn't long before the duo moved the eatery to larger digs in Arlington, and later expanded by opening Olé in Inman Square and another Zocalo in Brighton, which eventually moved to its current Back Bay location.

Along the way, the brothers "sort of split up," says Ricardo Ramos, who turned his interest to other restaurants six years ago, staying out of the Arlington Center Zocalo's operations until this September. But now he's back, adding his touch to the menu while keeping prices reasonable, with entrees topping out at $18. "Everything is made from scratch. It's authentic Mexican cuisine with French plating—upscale but half the price" of Boston high-end dining, he says. So far, he says, the response from Arlington diners has been fantastic: "I see people I haven't seen in 10 years!"

MUCHO CUBAN

JOHN VERLINDEN—chef of the late, much-loved Mucho Gusto Cafe & Collectibles in Boston—has written a cookbook that's the Cuban culinary equivalent of a warm embrace from a dear friend. To Cook Is to Love is subtitled Nuevo Cuban: Lighter, Healthier Latin Recipes, and it covers everything from classic mojo criollo to a reduced-fat tres leches cake. Interwoven with the 200 recipes and other cooking tips are the reminiscences of Mami Aida, Verlinden's mother-in-law, which provide a captivating narrative of Cuban history and culture.

CHECK, PLEASE

CONTRIBUTING TO A GOOD CAUSE IS AT THE top of many people's to-do lists this time of year, and Hearth Shares hopes to make giving a little more convenient. Through Dec. 31, when you get your bill at the end of a meal at more than 25 Boston-area restaurants, you'll have a chance to help the homeless. Add a dollar or more to your check and it all goes directly to local nonprofit organizations working to house the homeless. So far, the roster of restaurants includes Ashmont Grill, Blue Ginger, Cinquecento, Mistral, Sweet Cheeks and Tavolo, among others.

FRENCH KISS

Sauvignon blanc has taken off lately thanks to its over-the-top citrus and uncompromising acidic flavors that harmonize beautifully with a lot of current food trends. The original French versions have none of the tropical flavors we've come to expect from New Zealand offerings, and they do not share the high-alcohol bite of their Californian cousins. These three picks are stars in the minimalist, bone-dry style that France's cool northern terroirs excel at producing. / Sandy Block

DOMAINE DE LA PERRIERE, SANCERRE, 2013
This estate-bottled wine shows a bit more finesse and richness, as one might expect from the chalky hillside vineyards of Sancerre. Floral and delicate, with a lemon fragrance, it's crisp but also gentle on the palate. The finish is a bit earthy, and it would work beautifully with a goat cheese tart or cold seafood salad.
$20, Trader Joe's, Cambridge

FOURNIER SAUVIGNON, VIN DE PAYS DE LOIRE, 2013
Wow! For the price, this is amazing: tart and fresh, with piercing grapefruit, tarragon and lemongrass accents. A classic lean French sauvignon, it has a stony finish that lingers, suggesting a great accompaniment for a fish fry or herb-rubbed grilled seafood.
$13, Beacon Hill Wine

SIMONNET-FEBVRE, SAUVIGNON DE ST. BRIS, 2012
Oysters, anyone? The only sauvignon blanc produced in Burgundy, from a small commune of fewer than 400 acres, this has a stark saline minerality. It's a very exciting wine, angular with pinpoint aromas and vibrant lemon flavors.
$16, Brookline Liquor Mart

BEARING FRUIT:
Petsi Pies' latest flavor combines three fall favorites.

Apple Pear Cranberry Pie, $24 at Petsi Pies, 285 Beacon St., Somerville (617-661-7437); additional locations in Cambridge; petsipies.com

Good Eats: Pie in the Sky

As if the regular roster at Petsi Pies doesn't already tempt us, owner Renee McLeod is rolling out a few extra flavors just in time for the holidays. Our favorite combines the ultimate trio of fall fruits—apples (Granny Smiths and Cortlands), pears and cranberries—beneath a rich brown sugar-walnut crumb crust. The effect is pleasantly tart, not to mention more complex and colorful than plain old apple, pumpkin or pecan. If you missed the cutoff for Thanksgiving orders, keep this one flagged for Christmas—and stay tuned for updates about an upcoming second Cambridge Street location. / Elizabeth Bomze

DON'T MIND THE PAIN

A PRACTICAL GUIDE AIMS TO HARNESS THE THERAPEUTIC POWER OF MEDITATION.

Sitting Together: Essential Skills for Mindfulness-Based Psychotherapy* by Susan M. Pollak, Thomas Pedulla and Ronald D. Siegel
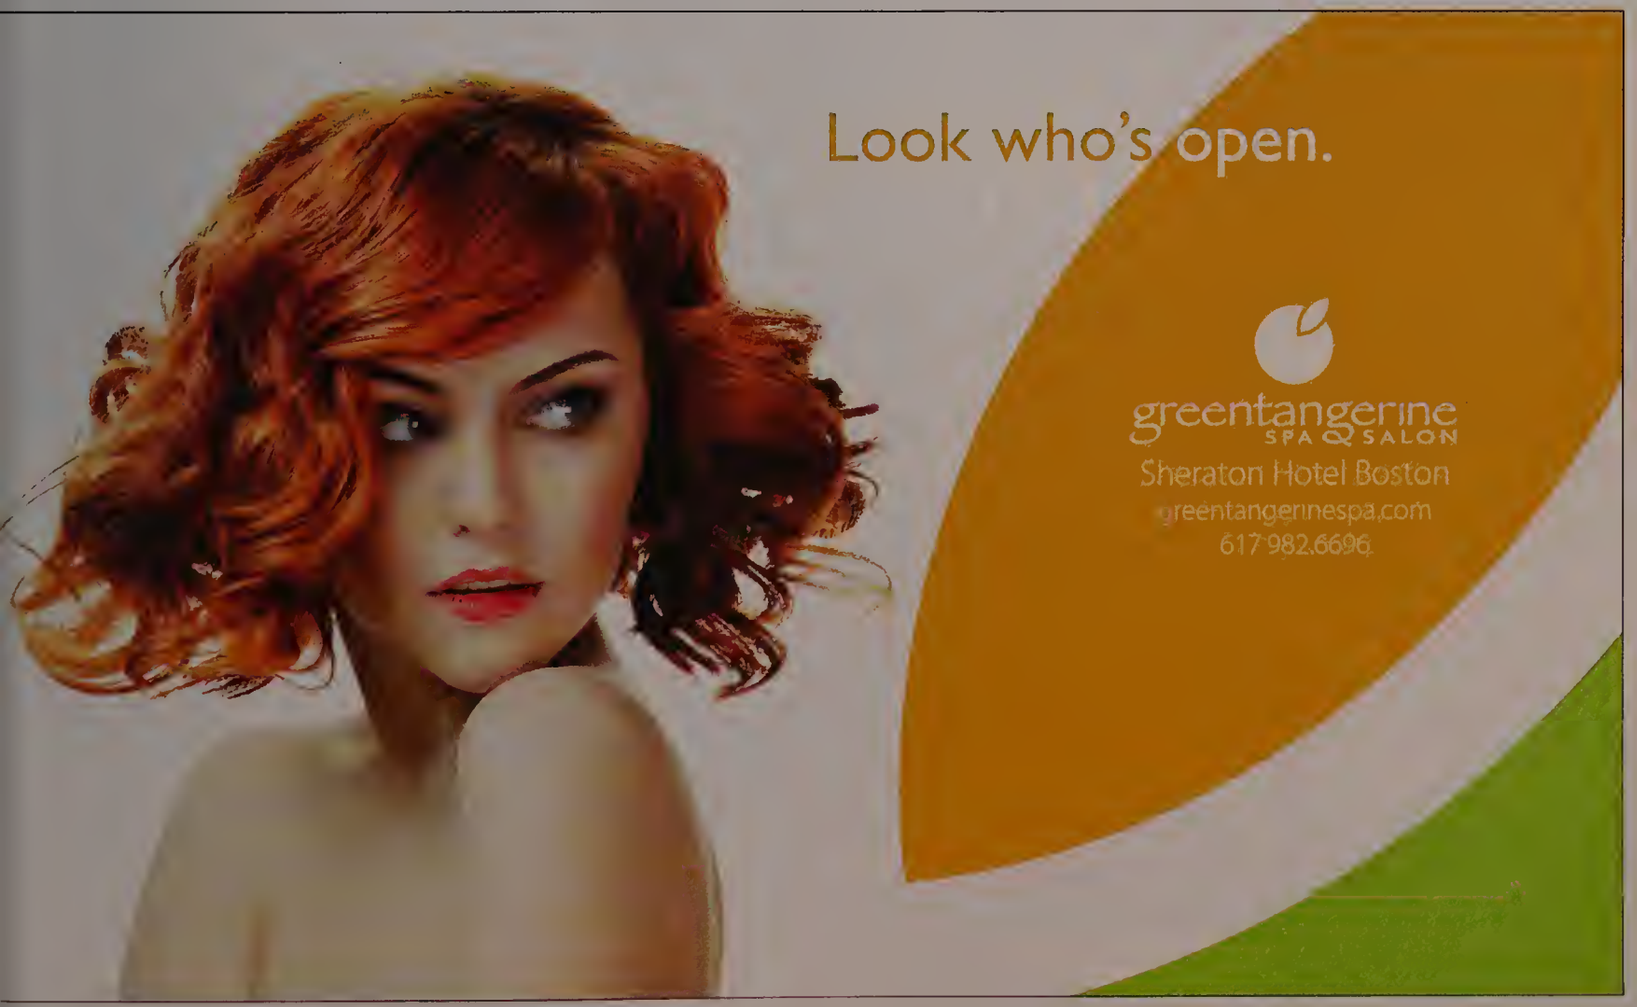
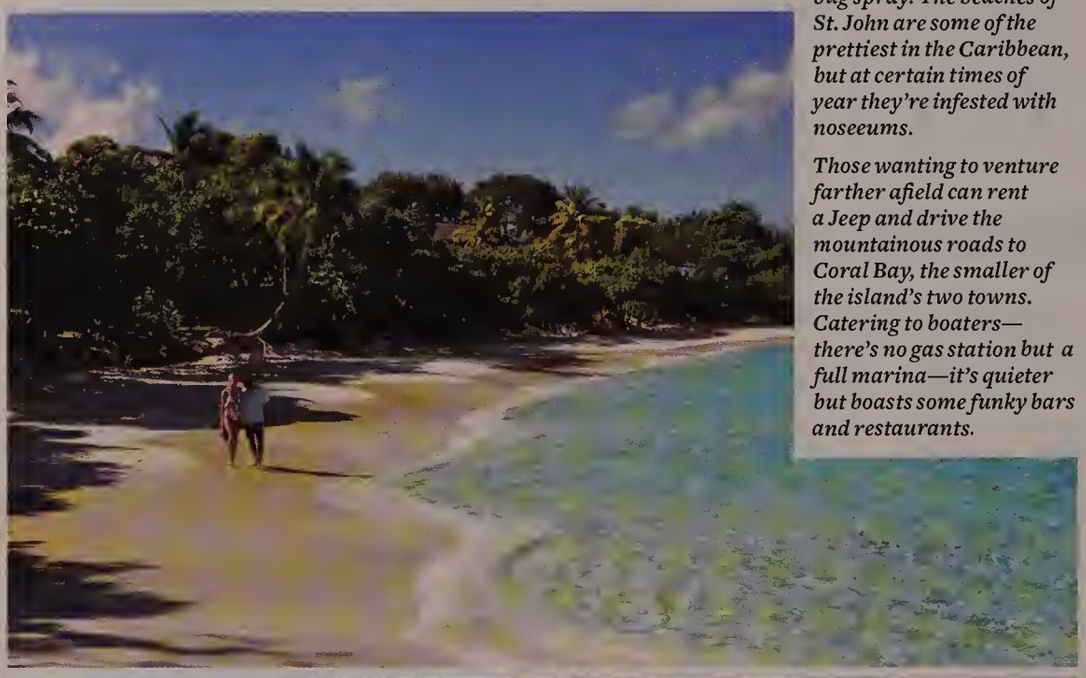
Published by the Guilford Press, 240 pages, $35



THE JOURNEY TOWARD MINDFULNESS is one mostly taken alone. But in this book, three local therapists discuss the ways they use meditative approaches with their patients. And alongside vignettes of people in therapy suffering from the usual array of human woes—anger, anxiety, depression—they lay out philosophies and techniques we all can use, on or off the couch.



To get you to that golden realm, the authors describe techniques for focusing on the vivid present: saying a loving-kindness mantra to oneself or to others, listening acutely to everyday sounds, contemplating a raisin in all its surprisingly complex beauty. And then there's attending to that blessedly available treasure, our breath, noticing and using it almost as a singer does.

Mindfulness also maintains that all things, including one's very self, are impermanent, like shifting wind or a passing cloud. So instead of "being" angry, people are encouraged to see "anger arising." This outlook helps loosen and lighten suffering through gentle detachment.

Pollak, Pedulla and Siegel sensitively explore the ways different people can use mindfulness—and that includes themselves. Exercises abound, as do case studies that show how patients are helped to find a door in the wall of pain that opens out into fresher air.

FROM PAGE 125: Use your breath or the loving-kindness phrases as a surfboard to keep yourself steady. It's OK to "wobble" and to move back and forth as you try to find your balance. Just as in riding a real surfboard, constant subtle adjustment is necessary. See if you can find a dynamic rather than static balance. ◆

SHORE THING. With seven beaches, it's easy to feel like you have the white sands all to yourself.

Traveler's Checks

Be sure to bring or buy bug spray. The beaches of St. John are some of the prettiest in the Caribbean, but at certain times of year they're infested with noseeums.

Those wanting to venture farther afield can rent a Jeep and drive the mountainous roads to Coral Bay, the smaller of the island's two towns. Catering to boaters—there's no gas station but a full marina—it's quieter but boasts some funky bars and restaurants.

ST. JOHN'S SECRET

CANEEL BAY OFFERS A TRANQUIL OASIS IN THE OFTEN CROWDED CARIBBEAN.

"THE NEWLY WED AND THE NEARLY dead" is how jaded types describe the clientele at old-school, high-end Caribbean resorts—but while rich retirees and canoodling honeymooners are certainly part of the equation at Caneel Bay, they're easily ignored in favor of the seductive tropical beauty.

One of the world's first eco-conscious hotels, Caneel Bay was built on the U.S. Virgin Island of St. John by Laurance Rockefeller in the 1950s. Its 170 acres are situated on a private peninsula within Virgin Islands National Park, which Rockefeller created by buying the 5,000 surrounding acres—thereby ensuring the place remains unspoiled. One look at the overdeveloped and overrun neighboring island of St. Thomas is enough to make anyone thankful that he did. Because St. John has no airport, visitors to Caneel Bay must fly into St. Thomas (roughly a four-hour nonstop flight from Boston) and then catch one of the resort's private ferries from the honkytonk port of Charlotte Amalie. A 35-minute ride later, they've left behind the cruise ship throngs sipping rum drinks and hunting for duty-free bargains, instead finding a mellow paradise of seven white-sand beaches shaded by maho and coconut trees.

Last year, Caneel Bay was rebooted as an independent property, and while the original midcentury architecture remains and might strike some as dated, the quality of the food, amenities, service and activities is inarguably five-star. Despite its having 166 rooms, a private atmosphere prevails, and with seven beaches to choose from ("one for every day of the week," as the staff likes to mention), none ever seems crowded. The absence of telephones and televisions in the rooms adds to the serenity, but for those unable to unplug completely, there is Wi-Fi...and a quaint New York Times facsimile that's distributed alongside the freshly squeezed juice at breakfast.

Choosing how to spend your time is about as stressful as things get. The use of snorkeling equipment, Sunfish, kayaks and paddleboards is complimentary, and scuba diving, sailing trips, powerboat rentals, tennis instruction and island tours are available at an additional charge. However, one of the resort's strongest amenities is its spa. To call the signature massage with warm bamboo "sublime" might sound like hyperbole, but it's accurate, and treatments are administered in rooms with sigh-provoking views. A pedicure by one of the Beauty Lounge pros, meanwhile, didn't chip, ding or dull for three months after returning to close-toed Boston weather.

Not surprisingly, there are few prettier places in the world to sail, and the diving is superb. But even the most group-activity-averse individual might enjoy offerings like the Kayak-Hike-Snorkel, which is led by a knowledgeable expert who can snap a photo of you swimming with a sea turtle, explain why the Navy used to call life vests "kapoks" (look it up) and tease a (perfectly harmless) tarantula out of its hidey-hole. And despite the allure of doing nothing but collapsing on the beach and reading a book, guests are bound to get a modicum of exercise simply from walking. Although there are phones to hail a golf cart outside every room, it's tempting to say "To hell with it" and stroll through the extensive gardens.

You'll be thankful that you did, given the resort's food, overseen by executive chef Anthony Dawodu, who worked as chef de cuisine at the Four Seasons, Boston. He creates contemporary American cuisine using local ingredients (and produce he grows himself at a nearby biodynamic farm) at Turtle Bay Estate House, located at the end of the peninsula in an old colonial building, while ZoZo's at the Sugar Mill offers northern Italian fare by renowned island chef John Ferrigno. The sushi is superb at the Caneel Beach Bar and Grill, as are the club sandwich, burger and chopped salad, and the buffet at the Caneel Beach Terrace is infinitely superior to your average sneeze-guarded smorgasbord. There's even an on-site gelateria and coffee house called Cannella, where you can grab a quick (or as quick as things get on St. John) panini.

The obligatory sunset cocktail cruise offers visitors a glimpse of the rest of the island, while St. John's main town, Cruz Bay, is a short cab ride away. A ramshackle, hilly collection of candy-colored buildings, it has a swashbuckling charm. The preponderance of bars and gift shops located cheek by jowl is anything but coincidental; however, you can still find beautiful examples of larimar—the pale blue semi-precious stone found only on the Dominican Republic—at reasonable prices. The names of the restaurants, meanwhile, might recall SpongeBob SquarePants (Fatty Crab, Driftwood David's) or Pirates of the Caribbean (Spyglass, Rhumb Lines), but there's an impressive selection of good and varied food. And the nightlife is just as lively as in places like St. Barth, but less pretentious.

Paying guests aren't the only ones drawn to the charms of Caneel Bay. One of the resort's most noticeable trademarks is its large population of feral donkeys, descendants of the animals that worked the plantations. The management tried to keep them out for years, but finally decided that coexistence was a better approach. They're now a beloved feature of the place, seemingly content to sit in the shade or wander around nibbling the grass. They seem genuinely happy to be there. Then again, you'd have to be an ass not to be. ◆

STORMY WEATHER

BEL ARI HAS ELEMENTS OF A WINNING FORMULA, BUT LACKS CONSISTENCY.

BEL ARI
107 South St., Boston
belariboston.com

Bel Ari, the Leather District's newest Italian restaurant, is a bit of a puzzle. It has good bones in the form of a lovely industrial design in shades of black, silver and gray. It has good genes in chef Robert Fathman, a long-admired veteran who also runs the kitchen of nearly next-door sibling Les Zygomates. One co-owner runs Pastene, the venerable Italian-foods producer and importer, whose products feature prominently on the menu. The waitstaff is fresh-faced and eager to please, hustling hard around the airy, spacious, noisy bar and dining room. So why, more than two months into its maiden voyage, is the experience here so maddeningly uneven?

A Negroni ($9) arrives all wrong one night, subbing lemon for sweet vermouth (ick), but is perfectly executed on another. The specialty cocktail list centers on light, refreshing originals that favor muddled fruit and something bubbly, as in the Tesoro ($11) of fresh blackberries, honey syrup, Aperol and splashes of prosecco and seltzer. The wine list leans heavily on big, overly familiar vintners, but at least there are 27 options by the glass ($9-$30, most under $14). The bottle list includes 10 sparklers ($45-$425), 25 whites ($30-$90) and 47 reds ($36-$235), while the deep-pocketed can browse from 50 trophy wines on the reserve list ($140-$3,600, most under $400). More typical are relatively lightweight wines like a 2009 Masi Campofiorin Valpolicella Veneto ($48), with its ripasso-process hints at the character of much pricier Amarones, and the 2010 Corte alla Flora Vino Nobile di Montepulciano ($52), with its muddy, spicy fruit and the thin, short finish typical of modest Tuscan reds.

The complimentary bread basket's best offerings are flat, salty breadsticks, but they are missing some evenings, leaving only slices of bland, fluffy Italian loaf to sop up some respectable EVOO. Small plates deliver the most reliable doses of joy: semolina cakes ($6) are delectably crisp and airy, with sharp accents of good Taleggio, lardo and sea salt. The smoky, bright tomato sauce and tangy goat cheese on lamb meatballs ($8) compensate for their slight chewiness. Roasted shishito peppers ($6) with olive oil and smoked salt prove once again to be irresistible, occasionally incendiary and impossible to screw up. Whipped ricotta ($8) with honey and a heavy dusting of crushed pistachios, served with brittle slices of date bread, is almost sweet enough to serve for dessert, but its simplicity and contrasting textures are nonetheless winning. Lobster mac ($10) made with ditalini pasta boasts only cursory flecks of lobster meat, but its creamy sauce with excellent sharp cheese and mercifully subtle use of the often-deadly truffle oil is surprisingly satisfying for a done-to-death dish. A plate of housemade salumi ($22 for three, $32 for five) shows admirable craft, especially in bites of deep-flavored boar salami, nicely fat-edged coppa and tender, carmine-tinged bresaola, well paired with jams, olives and caper berries.

Middle courses are decidedly iffier, with kitchen pacing a persistent problem, as in a 50-minute interval between small plates and appetizers one night. At last, here is our long-awaited iron pot of pan-roasted Manila clams and mussels ($14); alas, it is stone cold. House-made spaghetti ($22) is loaded with fine small clams, but demonstrates how fresh pasta is not always superior to dried: The spaghetti is limp and mealy. Worse, two advertised ingredients, pancetta and bottarga—especially the latter, with its gorgeous, salty funk—are nearly undetectable, a serious omission when the dish's sauce otherwise registers as weak chicken stock. Pici hand-rolled pasta ($19) fares rather better with its twisted strands of fresh pasta, cubes of crisped pancetta and intense olives, but its almost deconstructed form, with an anchovy and tomato left whole, is an odd, off-putting choice.

In a neighborhood with increasingly serious options for Neapolitan-style pies, a classic pizza margherita ($15) with tomato sauce, buffalo mozzarella and basil tastes underseasoned and underdone; its sauce needs salt, its crust a bit of char. Secondi demonstrate more dependable execution. Pan-seared scallops ($30) are prettily presented on a long, narrow plate as five sweet, perfectly browned, seriously plump specimens on squash puree. Grilled housemade pork sausage ($27) has the coarse, almost crumbly texture of cotechino; nesting atop a stew of white beans, chard and tomato ragu, it's a supremely rich, comforting dish for a wintery night.

But desserts are another gamble, from a tired umpteenth iteration of tiramisu ($8), to a dry, unmemorable crostate pignoli ($8) with fig marmellata, to a beautiful, intense cioccolato torte ($8) with little piles of bitter cocoa nibs and a big scoop of caramel white chocolate gelato. In concept, talent, location and ambiance, Bel Ari has many of the elements that it needs to succeed. But to draw crowds and raves over the long term, it will have to overcome that most stubborn and pernicious of restaurant bugbears: The tendency to deliver A-minus performances with certain dishes on some evenings, and D-pluses on others. If it can get to the point of earning a solid B across its menu, night in and night out, Bel Ari may yet emerge as a winner. ◆

Q: OVER THE PAST COUPLE OF YEARS MY UPPER EYELIDS HAVE STARTED TO SAG AND IT'S MAKING ME LOOK TIRED (AND OLD)!

A: There are several factors that can contribute to having droopy lids, but usually the condition is hereditary.

The best way to correct droopy eyelids is through surgery. The technical term for cosmetic eyelid surgery is blepharoplasty. The goal is to look totally natural and to look like yourself, but more alert and refreshed.

This one-hour surgical procedure is performed under local anesthesia. The recovery time is around a week. During this period you will feel fine and can drive, shop, and maintain normal activities. However, there will be swelling and bruising around the eyes for a few days.

The first step is a consultation with an ophthalmic plastic surgeon, an eye surgeon who specializes in plastic surgery, such as Dr. Daniel Townsend at SkinHealth. You want to find a surgeon who has lots of experience, and Dr. Townsend has successfully performed over 13,000 of these procedures.

FOXCATCHER* ★★½

Starring Steve Carell, Channing Tatum, Mark Ruffalo, Sienna Miller, Anthony Michael Hall and Vanessa Redgrave. Written by E. Max Frye and Dan Futterman. Directed by Bennett Miller. At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.

Movies / Brett Michel

OFF BY A NOSE

CARELL, TATUM AND RUFFALO WRESTLE AND MAKE UP.

"DO YOU HAVE ANY IDEA WHO I AM?" asks Steve Carell in his almost-certain-to-be-Oscar-nominated role as John Eleuthère du Pont, seated on a couch in the du Pont family's trophy room across from Channing Tatum, who plays 1984 Olympic gold medal-winning wrestler Mark Schultz.

Not only does Mark not know this odd man with the cold, dead eyes and unnaturally large proboscis, but we—the audience—have difficulty spotting the gifted comic actor playing him. In this true-crime drama, Carell is nearly unrecognizable, with his head and hands covered in liver spots, a graying hairpiece, grotesque dentures and a prominent prosthetic nose that he uses to guide his performance, sticking it forward like the beak of a hawk. Or perhaps another breed of bird...

"Call me 'Eagle,'" du Pont tells the big lug. "Or 'Golden Eagle.'"

For his part, Tatum is also outfitted with a bulbous extension on the tip of his nose, along with false cauliflower ears. The makeup in Foxcatcher is an unconvincing distraction, a miscalculation by director Bennett Miller, the talented director of Capote, who'd resisted burying Philip Seymour Hoffman under latex when he steered the late, great performer toward a Best Actor win as the flamboyant, soft-spoken writer.

Like Hoffman before him, Carell adopts a voice unlike anything we've ever heard from him, a lilting monotone that's as vacant as du Pont's eyes. It's a deliberately creepy, off-putting performance, so it's unfortunate that Miller decided to disguise his well-known leading men so much, especially when they're delivering such strong work. In his last picture, Moneyball, he didn't feel the need to physically transform Brad Pitt into Billy Beane, the Oakland A's general manager. He simply let Pitt lead with his own inimitable features (and propensity for eating onscreen) and earn an Oscar nomination for his efforts.

Beyond his nose and ear extensions, Tatum can't resist jutting out his jaw as Mark, seething with mostly silent rage as he lives in the shadow of his older brother Dave, who also won the gold for wrestling in '84. He's played by a bearded Mark Ruffalo, who gives the film's best performance while undergoing the subtlest transformation, his hair thinned in front, a bald spot added in back. Dave is the more successful, likable Schultz sibling, a family man and gym owner who's happy to hear that the underemployed Mark is being offered a chance to prepare other Olympic hopefuls for the 1988 games at du Pont's Foxcatcher Farm, a massive estate in suburban Philadelphia.

Much of the film is laced with such darkly humorous moments, but the comedy only becomes overt during a few sequences.

After that initial meeting in the trophy room—a testament to the thoroughbred racing triumphs of du Pont's late father—Mark accepts the coaching job, and du Pont rather unnaturally tries to position himself as a Mephistophelean father figure to the floundering athlete. "I don't want you to be in the shadow of your brother," he says, seductively offering Mark a check for $10,000 on top of his regular salary, which Mark is hesitant to accept. "No, you earned it," says du Pont in his soft lilt. "We're friends."

Du Pont tells Mark that he had only one friend while growing up, but when he was 16, he discovered his mother had been paying the other child to spend time with her awkward son. Some family traits are inherited.

As such, it's only fitting that the increasingly eccentric, erratic heir to a fortune built on gunpowder manufacturing would begin waving a gun around, firing it nonchalantly into the ceiling of his state-of-the-art training facility while his wrestling team silently continues practicing.

Much of the film is laced with such darkly humorous moments, but the comedy only becomes overt during a few sequences. Take the one set in a helicopter en route to a high-society function, where du Pont offers his "friend" cocaine while coaching him on how to introduce him as an "ornithologist/philatelist/philanthropist," a phrase the two volley back and forth in a rapid-fire patter of drug-fueled chatter.

The growing homoeroticism that develops between them is distressing to du Pont's mother, Jean (Vanessa Redgrave), a horse breeder who considers wrestling a "low sport." She's frail but nevertheless looks great, considering the real Jean died before many of the events of Miller's film took place.

As Mark begins to prove a disappointment to du Pont, he offers a coaching position to Dave, setting the stage for a tragedy that is forecast in the film's gray skies and the snowy onset of winter, evocatively captured on film by Greig Fraser. It's a shame that the horror that unfolds deviates so far from reality, at least when it comes to chronology. Writers E. Max Frye (Something Wild) and Dan Futterman (Oscar nominee for Capote) set the film's events during the course of a year, mostly during the buildup to the 1988 Olympics. Not only have they resurrected a du Pont matriarch to fit their script's pathology, but the climactic tragedy that's shoehorned into the film's final 10 minutes didn't actually transpire until 1996. It makes the central supposition of what may have fueled the crime that took place at Foxcatcher Farm feel as false as the nose on Carell's face. ◆

SUGAR RAY AND THE BLUETONES
play Scullers Jazz Club on Dec. 4.

Music / Paul Robicheau

LIKE FAMILY

BLUES INSTITUTION TOASTS TO ITS 35TH ANNIVERSARY IN TOP FORM.

IT'S NOT HARD TO FIND A CLASSIC ROCK BAND that's still around after 35 years, especially given the lucrative option of extending a brand name. But in jazz and blues circles, where players shuffle through live dates and recording sessions, it's more unusual to find a unit that's endured through the one-nighters and niche record sales.

Yet that's just where Sugar Ray and the Bluetones find themselves, heading to Scullers Jazz Club on Dec. 4 in support of Living Tear to Tear, the Rhode Island-rooted band's fine August release of Chicago-style blues.

"Nobody's played together for 35 years, so we really have an advantage in that way," frontman Sugar Ray Norcia says of his blues crew with 13-year member Mike Welch on guitar and the original rhythm section of keyboardist Anthony Geraci, bassist Michael "Mudcat" Ward and drummer Neil Gouvin.

"It's almost telepathic at times," says the singer and harmonica ace. "They're right behind me, especially Mike Welch. I can't skunk the guy because his ears are wide open. I don't have to think about what I'm doing 'cause I get total support."

That's "Monster" Mike Welch, who was only 13 when Dan Aykroyd gave him that nickname at the 1992 opening of the original House of Blues in Cambridge. Today, he's 35, as old as the Bluetones. "I say half-jokingly that my job is just not to ruin my favorite band," says Welch, who lives in Somerville. "I feel I can be part of that shifting give-and-take communication. Simple, traditional music is very dependent on that to give it life, as opposed to recreating something that's happened before."

Like Welch, Norcia favored the blues over pop music from his teen years in Stonington, Conn. "I was lucky enough to find people who were collecting Muddy Waters and Big Walter records," says Norcia, 60, who went to high school with drummer Gouvin. "We went on sojourns to Boston and bought armloads of blues records, like it was going on a hunt, and we'd go home and spend weeks spinning all these new artists," he says. "There was something about learning that way. Times change, but I sure do miss those days. I wish more people would immerse themselves and study the genre."

"Times change, but I sure do miss those days. I wish more people would immerse themselves and study the genre."

He also had a resource in his father, who taught music in neighboring Westerly, Rhode Island, and counted Roomful of Blues' Duke Robillard and Al Copley among his students. "All these guys were playing every weekend down at the Knickerbocker Cafe," Norcia says of the still-thriving venue where the Bluetones play Nov. 29. "They'd bring in guest artists like Joe Turner and Red Prysock, and I said, 'Holy shit, this is great stuff.'" Norcia—nicknamed "Sugar" for his sweet voice as a youth, before he picked up the harmonica—eventually fronted Roomful from 1991 to '98, his only break from the Bluetones.

Norcia first cut his teeth, however, at the Speakeasy in Cambridge, backing blues icons like Big Walter Horton in the house band with guitarist Ronnie Earl and the Bluetones in the '70s. Chicago guitarists Hubert Sumlin and J.B. Hutto went on to tour with the Bluetones; Hutto even spent Thanksgiving with the Norcia clan. "He really dug the fact that I had a close-knit family," Norcia says. "We made him feel at home."

However, Norcia wouldn't just imitate his idols, even in the case of primary harp influence Little Walter, whom Norcia feted with an all-star cast on 2013's Grammy-nominated Remembering Little Walter. He honors Little Walter's improvisational style when he covers his tunes. "It turns some harp players off, like 'You're not doing it right,'" Norcia says. "I say, 'Man, you've got the wrong idea. Be yourself.'"

Sugar Ray and the Bluetones fulfill that role on Living Tear to Tear, which sports originals from four of the band members. The songs range from the swinging "Rat Trap" to the slow blues "Misery," which balances a slippery rhythmic synergy and stinging guitar lines. And Norcia's ballad "Our Story" pays sentimental tribute to a relationship that outlasts even the Bluetones, the 40-year bond with his wife.

"That's an amazing story in itself, I guess, especially for a traveling, working musician," he says. "She used to come out to see me. That's how I met her, in a club." ◆

BREAKING CAMP

MY MISADVENTURE IN THE NOT-SO-GREAT OUTDOORS

THE LAST TIME I WENT CAMPING WAS five years ago, for a friend's bachelor party at an off-the-grid cabin on a mountain in New Hampshire. As darkness fell, there was one guy nobody seemed to know. When I asked about him, one of the partygoers told me, "He's a hitchhiker. I picked him up to help carry stuff up to the cabin." We all laughed until we realized he was serious and we were now living in a horror movie. As we crawled into our sleeping bags that night, my friend Dave said, "Good night, Ez. Don't get murdered by the hitchhiker." That gave me my fill of camping for a while.

But recently my buddy Dan invited me camping at a place he goes every year, a remote fishing outpost set in a stand of trees near a deserted piece of beach. It's nothing more than some boards laid down to keep you off the ground, a couple of benches and a fire pit. With an upcoming stretch of unseasonably warm fall weather, I decided to break my camping boycott and head out there for a night.

Because it's a hike to get to this place, Dan recommends packing light. As in, no tent. "It's not supposed to rain," he says, "so you just need a sleeping bag." Even with no tent, I find myself dragging a beach cart loaded with a towering heap of supplies: a cooler, foul-weather gear, an air mattress, a pillow from home, paper towels and—banish the thought—toilet paper. Experienced hikers know you want a waterproof "dry bag" for crucial items, and I have one of those. A layman might take it for a Hefty kitchen trash bag. Which, OK, it is.

Between the trash bag full of clothes and the air mattress, I look less like a camper and more like a disaster victim or a guy whose wife just found his Tinder account. I'm not at all confident in my preparations, least of all in our food supplies. We plan to catch fish for dinner, which is a great plan if you are a pelican. You know what they say: You give a man a fish and... gee, that would be awesome. Please, give me a fish.

Fortunately, I've brought a package of jalapeno chicken sausages, just in case. When Dan drops one in the fire—a full 25 percent of our sausage supply—I spear it, wash it off and eat it anyway. After only three hours in the boonies, I've already revised the five-second rule to include eating food covered in soot. I'm probably not the guy you want in charge of the rations on your lifeboat.

By 9 pm we're ready for bed, and I climb onto my air mattress, snuggle into my sleeping bag and prepare for a blissful slumber beneath the stars. I fall asleep almost instantly, aided as I am by the one provision of which the camp had no shortage: bourbon.

When I awaken, it's with the unease you get when you're fully conscious but vaguely aware that it's nowhere near time to get up. Could it be 5 am? That would be OK. I could even deal with 4 am. I look at my phone and learn that it's precisely 12:38 am. And I'm awake because of the bloodthirsty cloud of mosquitoes hovering around us, thick as the windless night air. Of all the good reasons to bring a tent, mosquitoes hadn't occurred to either of us. And now there's no escape.

After only three hours in the boonies, I've already revised the five-second rule to include eating food covered in soot.

I wrap a long-sleeved shirt around my head and stick my nose and mouth out through the head hole. But it's not thick enough to drown out the buzzing, and I can hear them trying to get in. They keep landing on my nose, and I'm smashing them onto my face every minute or two. It's the middle of the night, and I'm awake, smeared with blood and insect carcasses. The Native Americans had a word for dealing with this: "Ramada."

By 4 am I'm cutting deals with whatever deity might listen, claiming that I'll buy some mosquito nets for the Red Cross if only the attack relents. It doesn't, but I might still do that anyway. Not really out of humanitarianism, but spite toward mosquitoes. Right now I would napalm this whole pristine ecosystem just to get rid of the mosquitoes. Didn't I read that some scientist was breeding them to give one another deadly STDs or something? Let's hurry up with that.

By sunrise I'm covered in so many bites that I look like I have the measles. It's temping to say that if I had a tent, the whole experience would've been different. But buying a tent is a slippery slope that eventually leads to growing a beard and carrying metal cups on your backpack. I think I'll stick with my prior policy, which is sleeping indoors. You know what makes a great window to nature? A window. ◆

The Dance / John D. Spooner

WORKING IT OUT

SOUND ADVICE ON CAREER AMBITION, PROPER DICTION AND ALMA MATER MATTERS

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is the Boston Globe No. 1 best-seller No One Ever Told Us That, a collection of letters with life lessons for his grandchildren. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

I'm focused on really getting ahead in my career. My girlfriend is not as ambitious, and I wonder if this will lead to problems in the future if we're being pulled in different directions. Am I wrong to make work my priority? I can't tell you how many couples I have known over the years that were in this quandary. Prior to the marriage, there were just too many parties and concerts, and too much windsurfing and sex, to ever seriously consider the compatibility of their career goals. Once you say the vows, and certainly if you have children, a lot of tumblers click into place, and attitudes about many things can change.

Most big problems in relationships revolve around money—or rather, the lack of it. But there are always trade-offs. If you really aim for success in a career, work can become all-consuming. One large investment bank used to tell new hires, "If you are serious about working for us, you will have no other life. Period. But if you make it here, you can probably retire by your late 40s and go off into the sunset." Few relationships would survive that approach. I worked at one firm where almost every chief lieutenant high up the corporate food chain gave their love first to the CEO, not their families. Virtually all of them got divorced. Long-term relationships need a lot of compromise, acting, sense of humor, patience and luck. If there are warning bells ringing before you commit forever, they seldom quiet down as time goes on. They just get louder.

You should have an honest heart-to-heart with your girlfriend about this subject. If she eventually wants the big house in Wellesley, along with travel and the country club, there's only one way to get it. And it's by leaning on your career.

I get incessant phone calls from my alma mater, calling for a handout. I know for a fact that the college I attended has one of the largest endowments of any private institution in the world. My question is: Will my potential contributions make any difference in getting my children in when they are of college age? Get used to it. All of us are under siege almost daily from every private school we ever attended, by phone, snail mail and email. Every nonprofit institution we've visited or nonprofit board we've served on also hounds us. Then there are the hopefuls we've never supported and probably never will, who nonetheless chime in constantly. Have I mentioned crowdsourcing requests? Is there no peace?

Of course we want the best for our children, and we all would probably love it if they could get into the colleges we attended. Personally, I'd go to any lengths to help get my kids into certain colleges. But the reality of college admissions is that almost anything short of a six-figure gift is not going to push your Jane or Johnny over the finish line at Yale or Duke or Notre Dame. Contributions in the hundreds of dollars will get you a note of thanks but little else, other than more communication to up the ante. Perhaps you'd better just concentrate on getting your child to be the best fencer in New England. Or the first American to fly like Superman.

The realist in me knows that big money talks at all colleges. But at the "elite schools," your children will need some specialty that separates them from all the other applicants. Otherwise, cough it up for the new gym or be prepared for rejection.

Would it be unseemly to ask for a modern working definition of "seemly"? Maybe you'd be kind enough to use it in a sentence? It appears the word has almost disappeared from contemporary conversation! Of course, one could argue the term "contemporary conversation," too. When I type "seemly" into my smartphone, the words army, Sealy, Seny and Sammy come up instead. Which brings me to my next question: What does "Seny" mean?!? Ahhh, "seemly." I know a woman who uses the word with gusto. I see this woman leaving her house on Beacon Hill, headed for a concert at Symphony Hall on a Friday afternoon. She passes me on the street, stops briefly and says, "How seemly you appear, suit pressed, bow tie, a proper Beau Brummell." Historically, women like this were not afraid of moving west in Conestoga wagons. Pioneers. Picture someone with high standards who'd hold your feet to various fires of good taste. I told her this and she just said, "Oh, you're acting like a coxcomb." Look it up. And never be afraid of using uncommon words as if you do it all the time.

"Seny," by the way, is not a word according to Oxford. But it sounds as if you have the right approach to life. Sometimes it's fun to be a little obscure. It keeps others off balance.

Why would famous, creative people like Robin Williams and Ernest Hemingway kill themselves? They had so much talent. Anything that seems exciting and glamorous from the outside seldom is if you're immersed in it as a profession. Most of the professional writers I have known are tortured by depression, addiction and the curse of never truly getting what they think they deserve. Years ago, a quite famous actor told me, "You get the Academy Award one night, and you wake up the next day wondering, 'Am I ever going to work again?'" Because the creative life is so full of solitude, and loneliness as well, no one who is not immersed in this life—no matter how loving or sympathetic—can ever really understand. Who knows what daily demons faced Hemingway or Williams or so many others? Fighting the demons inside us is never easy, and sadly many creative people will never know the joys they give to all of us. ◆

Soroff On / Matt McGorry

DOUBLE ACT

THE RISING STAR DISHES ON HIS TWO HIT SHOWS, EXPLICIT SELFIES AND WATERING EYES.

ONE OF TV'S BRIGHTEST NEW STARS, MATT MCGORRY, 28, plays Asher (aka "Doucheface") on the ABC series How to Get Away with Murder, as well as callow corrections officer John Bennett on the Netflix series Orange Is the New Black. Born and raised in New York, he attended LaGuardia High School and studied acting at Emerson College. After graduating in 2008, he went on to appear in CollegeHumor.com videos and honed his improv skills with the Upright Citizens Brigade. A former competitive bodybuilder, he's been featured in numerous men's magazines. His other TV credits include the upcoming Steven Spielberg/Edward Burns drama Public Morals, as well as Elementary, Gossip Girl, Royal Pains and Person of Interest. He recently completed his first starring role in a feature film, How He Fell in Love, scheduled for a 2015 release.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So first of all, can I call you Doucheface?
MATT MCGORRY: You could. We probably won't be best friends, though.

Did you have any idea how huge Orange Is the New Black was going to be? Yeah, I knew exactly. [Laughs] It's funny. With How to Get Away with Murder, I think we all expected it to have a very good chance of being a hit show. It stars Viola Davis, it's produced by Shonda Rhimes... ABC really put everything behind it. With Orange Is the New Black, when I went in for the role, you know, it was Netflix. The audition was like three lines for a potential recurring role with possible nudity. I thought maybe it was a hidden webcam sex show. So that was a true surprise.

So you were a short kid who became a totally jacked adult. Yeah, now I'm the one stuffing people in lockers. No, seriously, I wasn't that short. I was pretty chubby and out of shape, but I did something about it. I don't really consider myself jacked anymore. When I competed in bodybuilding and power lifting, I was 30 pounds bigger than I am now. So to me, I'm sort of in normal-guy range. And I also think that now I have something more to recommend me than swollen biceps.

So to reference How to Get Away with Murder—is your penis on any dead girl's phone? I'm pretty sure they're all still living. Last time I checked, she was at least on life support.

If you were going to commit murder, how would you do it? Probably with my penis on a dead girl's phone. I would hope it created enough shock that someone with even the slightest heart issue would perish. Seems like a safe way.

Biggest crime you ever committed and were never caught for? I stole a pack of gum when I was in fifth grade, but I felt really bad, so the next day I left 25 cents on the deli counter.

Any prison fantasies? Yes. Continuing to do a fourth and fifth and sixth season of Orange Is the New Black.

"The fun thing about playing a character who's such an asshole is that you can get away with everything on set."

Hardest part of soap opera acting? Being shirtless without much notice. I did a very brief stint on One Life to Live in a very small role, but they found a way to have my shirt off, standing in my underwear, in the bushes. Otherwise, it would definitely be the long takes. It was also my first time on a set like that, so I honestly didn't know what was happening.

Any faux pas? Definitely. There's this thing where you say your line, then kind of pause and do your concerned look before it cuts to commercial. I did my last line, did my concerned look and thought I'd messed something up, so I turned my head with this genuinely concerned look on my face, and it was pretty comical.

How much are you like Asher? Not much, but the fun thing about playing a character who's such an asshole is that you get away with everything on set. You can say the most offensive things in the world.

Is Viola Davis a force of nature? She is. She's a tornado of acting prowess, and we're sort of the cattle that get caught up in her powerful funnel. Isn't that a horrible metaphor? But seriously, everyone knows what an incredible actress she is, but she's also very down to earth and unbelievably funny. She does her best to make everyone on set feel equally important. She kind of sets the tone for the entire production.

You get away with some pretty raunchy stuff for network TV. There was a clip I watched where the gay character said, "He did this thing to my ass that made my eyes water..." Is Shonda Rhimes just pushing the boundaries? Maybe, and it might offend some people, but I think people are interested in realistic portrayals, and it's not pushing boundaries for the sake of pushing boundaries. There are gay men out there who make each other's eyes water, and it's a type of character you don't often see represented on television.

What do you hope happens to Asher? I hope he learns some lessons and grows up a bit. I'd like to see him forced out of his privileged little bubble, yet still retain some of that childish douchiness.

What do you hope happens with Bennett? I like the way he stands up for himself, but I'd like to see him "man up" a bit and take responsibility for the things he's done.

With How He Fell in Love—do I smell an Oscar? [Laughs] I'm not sure what you're smelling. I haven't seen it, frankly. It's harder to watch yourself as a lead in a film than in a supporting role on television. You sort of pick yourself apart, and I'm trying to be gentle with myself.

What's your best feature? Physically, I've been told that I have nice lips, which I didn't know until I read all the stuff people said on social media. But otherwise, I'd say my empathy and pursuit of greater emotional intelligence.

How long before you're on the cover of Vanity Fair? Probably right after I get my Oscar from How He Fell in Love. I'm in direct competition with Viola. I want to win an Oscar before she does. ◆

NEW ENGLAND NIBBLES FOR A KILLER HOLIDAY SPREAD

BY ELIZABETH BOMZE PHOTOGRAPHED BY JILLIAN MEDUGNO

TRADITIONAL SMOKED SALMON from Spence & Co. ($20/8 oz. at Whole Foods Market) Silky, delicately smoky and more tender than most commercial versions, the cold-smoked salmon from Brockton's Spence & Co. is just as at home piled on a bagel with schmear as it is draped over a slice of good Irish brown bread (like this one from Brookline's Matt Murphy's) or dressed up with a mustardy sauce, dill, capers and a squirt of fresh lemon juice.

SMOKED BLUEFISH PATE from Matt's Amazing Smokehouse ($9/8 oz. at the Brookline Winter Farmer's Market, City Feed and Supply, Foodie's and other local markets) After smoking Cape Cod-caught bluefish over hickory, attorney-turned-pitmaster Matt Baumann flakes the fish into coarse pieces and mixes them into a cream cheese-based spread that's at once rich, clean and perfectly balanced with red onion and lemon.

SMOKED MUSSELS from Ducktrap River of Maine ($7/6 oz. at Whole Foods Market) Plump, briny mussels paired with smoke are like Pringles: Once you pop them open, you can't stop eating them. Plus, they're bite-sized, which makes them natural party food. Don't forget the toothpicks!

Fish for compliments with these seafood finds, served here on slabs from Lowell's American Stonecraft, which upcycles fieldstones from local farms.

PICKLED HERRING from Bazaar ($6/lb.) Meaty chunks of herring tossed with crunchy red onion rings and bathed in a sweet-tangy brine are a smorgasbord staple, and they make a great addition to a largely smoked seafood spread. Like smoked salmon, it's great on coarse brown or black bread. For a richer result, stir a generous scoop of sour cream into the brine.

PRUFROCK from the Grey Barn and Farm ($21/8 oz. at Formaggio Kitchen) The tawny color and rough-hewn rind of Eric and Molly Glasgow's flagship cheese hint at its pungency, but six weeks of aging and washing on the Martha's Vineyard farm give this cow's milk paste a delicate, nutty sweetness, too, not to mention a supple consistency that spreads nicely at room temperature. Hit it with something rich and jammy, like Central Bottle chef Stacey Daley's plum/Concord grape conserve.

BEN NEVIS from Bonnieview Farm ($37/lb. at Central Bottle) Vermont's version of a young Pecorino is salty, rich, a tad barnyard-y and vaguely spicy near the rind—everything a good sheep's milk cheese should be. But it's much less sharp and breaks into pieces that are smooth and creamy rather than dry and crumbly.

STRACCIATELLA from Fiore di Nonno ($10/8 oz. at Somerville Farmer's Market) It's like inside-out burrata: shreds of just-pulled fresh mozzarella that Somerville cheesemaker Lourdes Smith bathes in gobs of ultra-rich, salty heavy cream. We like it by the forkful, but it does equally well on crusty bread with a slice of prosciutto or speck and drizzles of honey and extra-virgin olive oil.

Say cheese! Area farms and purveyors offer a tempting array of flavors and textures.

PIMENTO CHEESE from Cutty's ($7/8 oz.) The anti-cheese snob's cheese of choice, Charles and Rachel Kelsey's "p cheese" spread is more savory than most versions, thanks to sharp cheddar, roasted red peppers, garlic, Worcestershire, Dijon and just enough Hellmann's. Smear it on a baguette, a saltine or, per their suggestion, Melba toast with a strip of the house-pickled Allandale Farm cherry peppers ($6), which they sell alongside the cheese in the Brookline shop's front case.

ADA'S HONOR from Ruggles Hill Creamery ($10 at Central Bottle) The tiny Ruggles Hill Creamery uses its own goat's milk to produce this four-ounce round, named for the Hardwick farm's first nanny and modeled on a traditional French chabichou. Cutting through the bloomy rind reveals a liquidy ring that gives way to a core that's clean, milky-rich, dense and smooth.

HARBISON from Jasper Hill Farm ($17/10 oz. at Formaggio Kitchen) You can't go wrong with anything in the Vermont farm's fleet, but this cow's milk round stands out with its tingly, faintly spicy bite—that's from the strip of spruce wrapped around the exterior—and unctuous, gooey consistency, which makes it good spoon food. Simply cut off the top and dig in.

TRUFFLE SALAMI from New England Charcuterie ($27/lb. at Moody's Delicatessen) One of New England Charcuterie's most popular salumi come holiday time: heritage pork that's rubbed down with Italian truffle salt, touched with white wine, garlic and black pepper, fermented for a few days and dried for the better part of two months. The result is intensely savory and pairs particularly well with a plush, buttery brie.

COPPA from New England Charcuterie ($42/lb. at Moody's Delicatessen) Chef Jo[illegible] Smith has particular affection for this preparation. After a lengthy salt cure, the pork collar gets rinsed with wine, coated with a mix of paprika, pepper, bay leaf, cayenne and orange zest and stuffed into a beef casing before being dried for at least four months. The paper-thin slices match up nicely with melon—or, Smith says, coppa on a baguette with Parmesan and honey makes "a sensational ensemble."

SMOKED BRATWURST from Karl's Sausage Kitchen ($8.50/lb.) Smoky depth and satisfying snap are the hallmarks of these all-pork links, one of more than two dozen sausages made in-house at this North Shore institution. Because this is a raw-cured product, the paste is soft and almost spreadable; for a firmer texture, sear, grill or steam the links. Either way, have some sliced rye and pickled onions on hand.

GAME BIRD PATE EN CROUTE from the Butcher Shop ($22/lb.) "This is one of Chef Barbara's classic recipes," says Butcher Shop sous-chef Matthew Mahoney. The featured bird rotates based on availability—pheasant and squab make frequent appearances—but the rich pastry comes whimsically embossed with a duck icon that gives away the staple fowl.

Meet these prime pates and salumi, gathered from some of the best local restaurants and butchers.

FOIE GRAS AND OXTAIL PATE from Savenor's Cambridge ($38/lb.) Savenor's chef Sam Ferguson's recent rainy-day experiment turned out so well, he's showcasing it for the holidays. The alternating layers of foie gras mousse—faintly sweet, thanks to a splash of Sauternes, and as rich as buttercream—and braised oxtail meat, plus a cap of amber beef gelee, add up to a striking and decadent charcuterie pick.

HOLIDAY SPIRITS

By SCOTT KEARNAN
Photographed by ADAM DETOUR

It's getting colder. And with each dwindling degree on the thermometer or fresh inch of white fluff on the ground, we'll lose our resolve to trudge outside—even to a favorite bar. Fret not. Freeze not. We asked some top bartenders to share recipes and recommendations for winter imbibing at home. Whether you need the perfect punch for your party, a hot cocktail to kill the chill or a stomach-settling digestif after a huge holiday meal, we've got you covered.

A KNOCKOUT PUNCH

If you're planning a holiday party, serving punch has an obvious selling point: Short of hiring a bartender, batching a beverage in advance is the easiest way to ensure you don't miss your own bash because you're mixing cocktails all night. Besides, a communal cocktail encourages a sense of sociability. The gravitational pull of the punch bowl makes it the party's hub, where guests return to mix and mingle in different combinations.

Katie Emmerson, bar manager at The Hawthorne, recommends her Speedwell Punch. It's a perfect pick for any holiday season soiree, thanks to a festive combination of olde New England ingredients: cranberries, tea and rum, the last a major Massachusetts export in the early American colonies. And it's particularly appropriate for Thanksgiving gatherings, as Emmerson named it for the smaller ship that was supposed to sail alongside the Mayflower, bringing Pilgrims to their future home in Plymouth. Alas, the Speedwell sprung a leak and never made that famous voyage. Boozehounds: Consider this an early admonition about breaking the seal too soon.

SPEEDWELL PUNCH

6 lemons
2 cups white sugar
2 cups double-strength rooibos tea
6 oz. cranberry liqueur
4 oz. Benedictine
12 oz. white rum
12 oz. dark rum

Peel your lemons to create homemade oleo saccharum, a sugary oil commonly used in classic punches. It's easy: Muddle the lemon peels with the sugar to release oils. (Let it sit overnight, or for two hours at minimum.) Then squeeze the peeled lemons to produce two cups of juice. Combine ingredients, stir to dissolve the sugar, strain out the lemon peels and refrigerate. When it's time to serve, add ice to your bowl and garnish with grated nutmeg.

(Serves 6-10 people)

Thirsty for More?

Head to improper.com for more recipes, including The Usual Suspects from Ribelle's Sean Woods and Presidential Punch from jm Curley's Daren Swisher.

PRO TIP:
Rather than buying bags upon bags of ice, Emmerson suggests making one large ice cube by freezing water in a generously sized Tupperware container.

A WINTER WARMER

Here's a fun fact you can use as a party icebreaker: The holiday standard "Let It Snow!" ironically originated during a 1945 Hollywood heat wave, when its songwriters were pining for cold weather. (Imagine that, New Englanders.)

Its lyrics suggest "corn for popping" when the snow isn't stopping. But we'd add hot cocktails to the wintry mix, and Island Creek Oyster Bar general manager Tom Schlesinger-Guidelli always concocts a creative selection of them for the chilly months. He's shared one of his favorites, the Pomelo Puro, which makes use of marmalade, a tactic for adding texture to water-heavy hot drinks, along with citrus flavors. We often associate the refreshing tartness of grapefruits and oranges with summertime, but Schlesinger-Guidelli points out that citrus fruits are actually at their peak availability and sweetness during the winter. And this cocktail lets you play a bit with kitchen ingredients, an easy exercise for rookie mixologists that will pass some time during a snow day.

Sip up. The weather outside is frightful, but inside, you're drunk, so who cares?

POMELO PURO

1 oz. Pisco Portón, a Peruvian white spirit distilled from grapes
1.5 oz. sage grapefruit marmalade
2 dashes orange bitters
1 dash absinthe
Hot water

You can opt for store-bought, but to create your own marmalade, cut a peeled grapefruit into eighths, then cook until reduced in half. Add 1 cup of sugar, 1 teaspoon of salt, 15 sage leaves and the zest of one orange. Simmer on medium heat for 30 minutes, and then chop coarsely in a food processor. Let cool before adding to the other ingredients.

PRO TIP:
Want to offer guests cocktail options without playing bartender all night or buying out the whole liquor store? Schlesinger-Guidelli suggests putting recipes and instructions for two or three drinks in picture frames next to a mixing area stocked with only the ingredients needed.

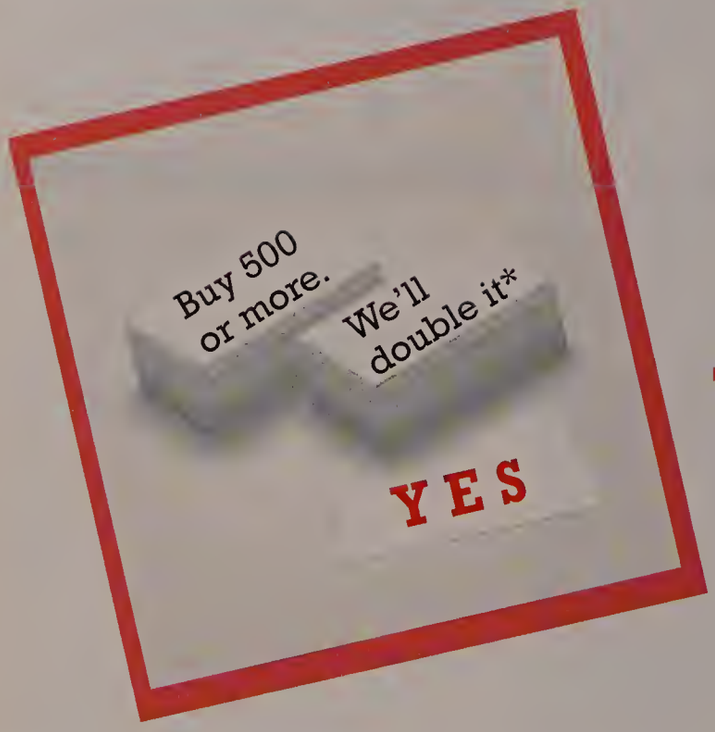
HAPPY ENDINGS

Every culture celebrates the holidays in different ways, but a toast with something strong is pretty much universal. Consider capping the festivities, and settling your stomach after a massive holiday meal, by clinking glasses with a digestif. Our experts shared their favorites from around the globe.

BECHEROVKA. This Czech herbal bitters "screams winter," says Fairsted Kitchen bartender Alex Homans. Its balance of sugar, herbs and warm baking spices, particularly cinnamon, tastes like Christmas in a bottle. Supposedly, its secret recipe remains known by only two makers, and Becherovka is often "prescribed" as a home cure for various ailments. Here's to your health!

GRAPPA. At Belmont's il Casale, you'll often find co-owner Damian de Magistris roving the room with his grappa cart, stocked with bottles of the Italian brandy made from the skins, pulp and other remains ("pomace") of pressed grapes. Grappa is used in zelten, an Italian Christmas cake of dried fruits and nuts, and its particularly robust bouquet is unique among digestifs, says de Magistris. He suggests Marolo Grappa Dedicata al Padre, a 120-proof "family style" variety that honors grappa's roots as a working-man's guard against the winter chill.

PUNSCH. Ezra Star, general manager of Fort Point cocktail mecca Drink, has fond memories of drinking this bittersweet liqueur at Christmases spent with friends from Sweden, whose sailors invented punsch in the 18th century. Back then, they added sugar and spices to arrack, a rum-like import from Southeast Asia, during long voyages. Today, it is typically served as a chilled digestif (Star likes the label Kronan), but Swedes also have a special Thursday night tradition of drinking warmed punsch with pea soup. Both Thanksgiving and Christmas fall on Thursday this year. You're welcome.



SCHNAPPS. In the German custom of Christbaum-Loben, celebrants visit neighbors to compliment their Christmas trees, receiving a thank-you shot of schnapps at each stop. They'd feel right at home at Union Square's Bronwyn, where bar manager Billy Weston curates an extensive schnapps selection. These aren't the sugar-loaded liqueurs Americans know, but sweet, clear brandies distilled from fermented fruits. For the home imbiber, Weston suggests Kammer Obstler, a 90-proof blend of Black Forest apples and pears.

SHERRY. Jodie Battles, beverage director at South End tapas haven Toro, loves the "versatility" of fortified white grape wines from Spain, recommending the sweeter, fig- and molasses-tinged flavor of Pedro Ximenez for holiday tippling. Another grape-based custom: In the early 20th century, Spanish wine growers offloading a surplus harvest popularized "Las Doce Uvas de la Suerte" ("The Twelve Grapes of Luck"), a New Year's Eve tradition in which revelers invite good fortune by scarfing down 12 grapes in the final 12 seconds of the year.

VIN D'ORANGE. The French use this homemade fortified orange wine as both an aperitif and digestif, says Bistro du Midi beverage director Olivier Flosse. But it is decidedly the latter during "Les Treize Desserts de Noël," a Provencal Christmas tradition that caps dinner with vin d'orange and 13 desserts, signifying Christ and his 12 apostles at the Last Supper. Easy recipes abound online and take about four to six weeks. Jump to it: You have just enough time.

METRO BOSTON'S GRACEFUL GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND LUCID DREAMING

AGENDA for 11/26–12/9

Wake up!

Run, don't walk, to a dreamy night of dance.

BE PREPARED TO ENTER A waking dream when Luminarium Dance Company debuts its new production, The Sleeprunner—an immersive performance that promises to transport viewers and dancers alike to a surreal dreamscape. Showcasing nine dancers as well as the four-year-old company's distinctive light and set designs, The Sleeprunner aims to provide a multi-sensory experience that pulls viewers along on the journey through a night's sleep, from the moment your head hits the pillow to the wild, dark and wonderful dreams that follow. Similarly immersive is the opening night's reception after the performance, featuring tasty bites from local restaurants, a cash bar and the opportunity for guests to mingle with the dancers. Dreams come true when The Sleeprunner opens on Dec. 5 for a limited run at Cambridge's Multicultural Arts Center. Alexandra Cavallo

THE SLEEPRUNNER opens on Dec. 5 at 8 pm and runs through Dec. 13 at the Multicultural Arts Center, 41 Second St., Cambridge. $23–$20, students and seniors. luminariumdance.org

BOLD & BOUNTIFUL

While the star power in The Trip to Bountiful shines bright—Vanessa Williams, Blair Underwood and Cicely Tyson headline a standout east—it's the compelling story that powers the ArtsEmerson show, one of just two post-Broadway engagements of the Tony-winning production. The revival of Horton Foote's oft-staged drama stars Tyson as Carrie, an elderly woman living in a small apartment with her son and his domineering wife. The generational rift between the aging matriarch and her dismissive daughter-in-law drives Carrie to strike off alone on one final sojourn to her beloved hometown of Bountiful, Texas—a bumpy road whose destination isn't what she imagined. Make the trip to the Cutler Majestie Theatre before Dec. 7. / Alexandra Cavallo

ROGER THAT When a series of ridiculous gags leaves a flight crew incapacitated in the 1980 disaster satire Airplane!, Ted Striker must overcome his fear of flying to safely land the plane. In case the movie's more subtle plot points escape you, MIT aeronautics and astronautics professor R. John Hansman will preface the cult classic with some real talk before its Dec. 8 screening, offering an overview of modern autopilot systems. It's a lecture Ted surely would have wanted to attend, if not for his "drinking problem." Just don't call him Shirley when it screens at the Coolidge Corner Theatre. / Grace Rasmus

Beyond the Lights ★★★1/2 Nina Simone's "Blackbird" functions as a theme song in this remarkably affecting romantic drama from Gina Prince-Bythewood (writer/director of Love & Basketball). It's first sung during a prologue by 10-year-old Noni (India Jean-Jacques), who is thrilled to take runner-up in a talent contest. But this isn't good enough for her controlling mother (Minnie Driver), who drags her from the stage, demanding that the now teary-eyed girl chuck her second-place trophy. Years later, the adult Noni (Belle's Gugu Mbatha-Raw in a spell-binding performance) is a Rihanna-like songstress on the verge of bigger things with the imminent release of her first solo album. Having broken through as the sexualized prop of white rapper Kid Culprit (Machine Gun Kelly), she seems to have taken her mother's all-or-nothing ideology to heart—until the cracks show and she attempts a suicide leap from her hotel balcony. Nate Parker plays Kaz, the young cop who saves her life, becoming a major part of it. "Why you wanna fly, Blackbird?" Noni finally wails during an emotional reprise of the song from her youth. "You ain't ever gonna fly." Poised for stardom along with Parker, Mbatha-Raw not only flies—she soars. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Big Hero 6 ★★★ After the success of Guardians of the Galaxy, is it any surprise that the Disney-Marvel union has brought another lesser-known superhero team to theaters? What is surprising is that this computer-animated comedy/adventure is more a product of Disney's 'toon traditions than the comic books that spawned it. Directors Don Hall (2011's Winnie the Pooh) and Chris Williams (Bolt) have reworked their source material, retaining character names but little else. Essentially, this is the story of a boy and his 'bot: 14-year-old genius Hiro Hamada (voiced by Ryan Potter) and Baymax (30 Rock's Scott Adsit), the inflatable robot protector left behind by Hiro's brilliant older brother, Tadashi (Daniel Henney), after he perished in a blaze at his school in downtown San Fransokyo. A villain emerges, utilizing tech stolen from Hiro, snapping him out of the depression caused by his brother's death. Enlisting Tadashi's "nerd lab" friends—Go Go Tomago (Jamie Chung), Wasabi (Damon Wayans Jr.), Honey Lemon (Genesis Rodriguez) and Fred (T.J. Miller)—Hiro creates a team of comic-inspired heroes. Not quite The Incredibles, they're nevertheless credible as a source of family fun. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Birdman or (The Unexpected Virtue of Ignorance) ★★★ There's a gimmick in this new tour de force from Alejandro González Iñárritu, but it's not what you're thinking. Sure, Michael Keaton is terrifically ironic as Riggan Thomson—aka Birdman, a nod to his time as Batman more than two decades ago—a washed-up actor attempting a "serious" comeback on Broadway by writing, directing and starring in an ill-advised adaptation of Raymond Carver stories. No, it's the single-take illusion that Iñárritu and cinematographer Emmanuel Lubezki employ when it serves little dramatic purpose, especially given the amount of time compression (the movie is set during the course of about a week). Lubezki won an Oscar for the same trick in Alfonso Cuaron's Gravity, and initially it seems to fit the backstage feel, as if we're watching a play within a play—but moving outside the theater, the technique is a scream for attention. That's a shame, given the nice work by Edward Norton as the stage star who tries to overtake Riggan's production, an understated Zach Galifianakis as Riggan's friend and producer, and Emma Stone out-acting everyone as Riggan's assistant. She's also the possibly schizophrenic actor's recovering addict daughter, who falls for her father's nemesis. Yeah, the script's the weakest part. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Dumb and Dumber To ★ America, you get what you deserve. You've just made this awful, virtually laugh-free sequel to a beloved 20-year-old comedy the number-one film at the box office, ensuring we'll be witnessing the further misadventures of Lloyd Christmas (Jim Carrey) and Harry Dunne (Jeff Daniels) by about 2034, as the end credits of Bobby and Peter Farrelly's film threaten. The Rhode Island-based brothers' latest finds them taking their signature dimwit creations on a road trip to locate the child (Rachel Melvin) Harry never knew he had, the product of a one-time union with "titanic whore" Fraida Felcher (very good sport Kathleen Turner). In their 30s, these two were amiable idiots; now in their 50s, they simply seem mentally ill, which is no fun to watch. Carrey has never seemed so desperate as a performer, while Daniels—who's become a terrific actor in the past two decades—plays his role with more pathos than the film deserves. The Farrelly brothers used to be masters of comic timing and well-orchestrated gags, with real affection for their characters. Now, they've seemingly given up, and the joke's on us, the ticket-buying public. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Fury ★★★ The latest work of nonstop brutality from writer/director David Ayer (End of Watch) begins with a lone figure emerging from the distance on horseback, an homage to the most famous shot in Lawrence of Arabia. David Lean's movie is a major work of art dealing with a complex man conflicted by his loyalties and the blood on his hands, while Ayer's, well, is not. It's macho porn, anchored by strong ensemble work (Brad Pitt, Shia LaBeouf and Logan Lerman star). It's also a feature-length merging of the unflinching assault on Normandy in Steven Spielberg's Saving Private Ryan with the violent climax of Sam Peckinpah's The Wild Bunch, a film Ayer had planned on remaking. However, between this movie and Sabotage, he's cribbed enough from Peckinpah's masterpiece that a remake would be redundant, much like this film, which stresses—again and again—the old trope that War Is Hell. It's 1945; Pitt's Sgt. Don "Wardaddy" Collier pulls the Nazi officer in the opening scene from his horse, stabbing the German repeatedly through his eye socket, before rejoining his five-man tank crew on their blood-soaked mission with destiny. Those with weak stomachs might want to skip the popcorn. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Gone Girl ★★1/2 Directed by David Fincher at his most coldly clinical, this wildly anticipated adaptation of the global bestseller by Gillian Flynn is faithful to a fault, lacking the lurid humor that would enliven such a potboiler. A handsome actor the media loves to hate, Ben Affleck is well cast as Nick Dunne, a man who's suspected of foul play when his seemingly perfect wife, Amy (Rosamund Pike), goes missing on the morning of their fifth wedding anniversary. Flynn adapted her own book for the screenplay, and while her material remains playful and increasingly ridiculous, it grows more and more tedious once the story opens up its secrets in the second hour and the fun drains out of the proceedings. This is the type of did-he-or-didn't-he movie that Michael Douglas used to star in as a matter of course—and Fincher even had success making one of these vehicles with Douglas when he directed 1997's The Game—but like Flynn's book, this film falters in its second half. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Assembly Row, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Homesman ★★★1/2 Described by men who insult her as "bossy" and "plain," Mary Bee Cuddy (a tremendous Hilary Swank) is finally given a compliment when the 31-year-old spinster is told she's "as good a man as any man here." She's better, actually—and she's the only one willing to transport three women (Grace Gummer, Miranda Otto and Sonja Richter) driven mad by brutal 1850s frontier life, delivering them by horse-drawn carriage from the Nebraska territories to a sanitarium in Iowa. As the sun rises over the plains brilliantly photographed by Rodrigo Prieto, the cast list appears, letting us know that along the way we'll encounter John Lithgow, Tim Blake Nelson, James Spader and Meryl Streep, each a standout in their short scenes. Tommy Lee Jones co-wrote the screenplay (adapted from Glendon Swarthout's 1988 novel of the same name) and appears as the title character, a lowlife claim jumper who Cuddy enlists to aid her after saving him from a noose. Jones also directs, giving himself free rein to ham it up, even as his elegiac Western shocks and ultimately deepens. One of 2014's best, late surprises. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Interstellar ★★ Christopher Nolan's latest film is set in an unspecified near-future where climate change has taken hold and man's ambition for science and exploration is a mostly forgotten dream. Matthew McConaughey's Cooper was once a Chuck Yeager-like test pilot for the remnants of NASA; now he's a farmer. In fact, everyone seems to be a farmer, fruitlessly trying to coax crops from the endless supply of dirt that keeps raining from the sky—but Nolan isn't content to keep the corn relegated to the fields. McConaughey's a terrific actor, and while a secret mission to save humanity will rocket him to the furthest reaches of another galaxy and even into—cue the Twilight Zone music—a fifth dimension, Nolan has marooned him with a script that contains very Earth-bound bromides about how love is the key...to everything. As an ill-advised subplot develops in the second act, we discover the threat to Cooper and the human race has less to do with the secrets of the universe than with man's nature—which is literally embodied by a character named "Mann," in case you didn't get it. Some space is best left unexplored. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Nightcrawler ★★★ Dan Gilroy sure wishes it was 1976. The well-regarded screenwriter's first time in the director's chair finds him plumbing that year's Network for his less-than-insightful look at the media's lack of ethics. At a horrific crash scene, underemployed thief Louis Bloom (Jake Gyllenhaal) chances upon Joe Loder (Bill Paxton), a veteran "nightcrawler"—a freelance camera man who films accidents, fires and murders and tells our inquisitive antihero that "if it bleeds, it leads," a notion that was already old when Paddy Chayefsky penned Sidney Lumet's classic. Gilroy even hired his wife (actress Rene Russo) to recycle Faye Dunaway's role as a ratings-starved TV news executive, completing the family affair by employing brothers Tony (his producer) and John (his editor) to aid in his slick, derivative production, which is elevated by a wonderfully wormy performance by Gyllenhaal. Having dropped 30 pounds so his eyes pop from his gaunt, haunted face, Gyllenhaal adopts a manner that recalls Robert De Niro's Travis Bickle, another morally bent antihero who originated in '76, in Martin Scorsese's Taxi Driver. True, Gilroy's picture springs from the spare parts of better films, but its dark humor stings timelessly. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Pride ★★★ If theater director Matthew Warchus' film only relied on the laughs mined from buttoned-up British thespian Imelda Staunton asking hilariously candid questions about homosexuality, it'd be worth a recommendation. But actor and first-time writer Stephen Beresford's shamelessly manipulative script also includes enough kitchen-sink realism to earn its tears. An earnest crowd-pleaser that avoids veering completely into sentimentality, the film relates the true events surrounding the 1984 formation of a London-based group of gay and lesbian activists who raised money to support the striking National Union of mineworkers and their families in the Welsh countryside. It features a wonderful cast, including Bill Nighy as a shy veteran miner, Paddy Considine as the union rep who welcomes the group to a town that initially doesn't know what to make of their new friends, and Dominic West as one of the first men in the U.K. to be diagnosed with HIV. Margaret Thatcher's England was a tough place for many, but these two groups of unlikely bedfellows discovered that standing together made for the strongest union of all. (At West Newton.)

St. Vincent ★★1/2 Bill Murray is a national treasure, and he's reliably great as Vincent, the hedonistic, misanthropic curmudgeon in Theodore Melfi's coming-of-age tale, where he becomes the unlikely mentor to Oliver (Jaeden Lieberher), a polite 12-year-old who's just moved in next door with his single mother, Maggie (Melissa McCarthy). But let's face it: Remove Murray from the film and you're left with sentimental formula. Nevertheless,

Murray elevates the formula tremendously, and he has a real chemistry with newcomer Lieberher. Remarkably, McCarthy plays the material straight, dialing her notable comic instincts way down as a put-upon mom barely holding things together. Likewise, Naomi Watts plays well against type as a run-down, pregnant Russian hooker named Daka, who accompanies Vincent and his young charge as they go about the retired war veteran's daily routine at the race track, the local dive bar and the strip club where Daka works despite her baby bump. Not quite the saint of the title, Vincent's a good man nevertheless. But would you let this drunk babysit your kid? (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

THE THEORY OF EVERYTHING ★★★1/2

There's more to Stephen Hawking than the 80-minute look you may have glimpsed during A Brief History of Time, Errol Morris' extraordinary 1991 non-fiction film about the life and work of the renowned theoretical physicist. Here, director James Marsh views Hawking from the perspective of his first wife, Jane, adapting her memoir into a touching biography. As Jane, Felicity Jones displays tremendous chemistry with the superb Eddie Redmayne, who does almost as much with limited mobility as Daniel Day-Lewis in his Oscar-winning turn in My Left Foot. When we first see him as a 21-year-old Cambridge student, Redmayne's Hawking shows subtle hints of his not-yet-diagnosed motor neuron disease, but when his legs eventually buckle beneath him, his head hitting the pavement with a sickening crack, the only one to disregard his doctor's assertion that he has two years to live is Jane, then a medieval studies major and a devout member of the Church of England. Stephen lacks faith in "celestial dictators," but the two navigate their different belief systems together for a quarter of a century—a love story that defines them and defies time more than just briefly. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Whiplash ★★★1/2 Even before the film's title comes into focus on the black screen, a quickening beat from a snare drum compels your attention, building with military precision until it ends with an echo, as if a muted gunshot has gone off. But there are no weapons deployed in writer/director Damien Chazelle's picture—only psychological warfare, focused on Andrew Neyman (Miles Teller), a 19-year-old drum prodigy in his first semester under Terence Fletcher, top conductor at Manhattan's Shaffer Conservatory, a fictionalized version of Juilliard. Menacingly portrayed by J.K. Simmons, Fletcher is seductive and terrifying, making Vern Schillinger, the Detroit native's character on HBO's Oz, look like Mr. Holland. Neyman pushes himself so hard for his taskmaster that his hands become raw and bloodied; Chazelle's drama nearly doubles as a horror film, with Neyman a man driven to kill, his drum set the victim. Like a great jazz riff, Whiplash becomes a series of variations on a theme, as the student fails to live up to his—or his teacher's—standards. And like many a great jazz song, the movie is sometimes unwieldy, but it builds to a hugely satisfying, electrifying finish. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

MAKE-UP SEX When UK rockers the 1975 dropped their eponymous EP last year—a slick, expertly produced debut awash with angular synths and infectious pop hooks—they gained a lot of instant fans, as evidenced by a sold-out gig at the Sinclair just one month after the album's drop. Few were likely aware that one of the record's catchiest singles, "Sex," is actually a revamped 2011 single from the band's short, unsuccessful stint under the moniker Slowdown. Not that it matters, as the 1975 are now poised for a bright future. They stopped by Boston Calling this fall, and they're back in town on Dec. 6 at the House of Blues. / Alexandra Cavallo

Edited by Sarah Hagman

MULTICULTURAL MUSINGS Wifredo Lam was a man of the world. With parents of Chinese, European and Afriean deseent, it's no wonder the Cuban-born surrealist spent mueh of his life globetrotting, picking up souvenirs and inspiration. Boston College professor Elizabeth Goizueta follows his travels in the retrospective Imagining New Worlds, beginning with his 14-year "stopover" in Spain, where he studied and designed anti-fascist posters during the Spanish Civil War. From there, Lam moved on to mingle with André Breton, Picasso, Matisse and other ereatives in Paris and then gallivanted with abstract expressionists in New York and voodooists in Haiti. Traee Lam's artistie journey through Dec. 14 at the MeMullen Museum. / Sarah Hagman

IMPROPER Sightings!

ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS!
A LIFETIME SUPPLY OF BANANAS WILL BE GIVEN TO THE IMPROPER READER WHO DINES WITH THE MACAQUES (AND SNAPS A PIC DURING THE FOOD FIGHT) AT THE ANNUAL LOPBURI MONKEY BANQUET IN THAILAND ON NOV. 30.

FOR MORE SIGHTINGS PHOTOS, VISIT IMPROPER.COM.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip.

Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy or, better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you went. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Anastasia Bannikova traded the Hippodrome's chariot races for Patriots football on a trip to Istanbul.

Jack Bartley and Mimi deQuesada delivered our Fall Dining issue to Rome, a city that knows good pizza.

Before saying "Bring it on" to a pint of Guinness, Leah McKinnon-Howe and Bob Howe took in the view with Eliza Dushku at the Cliffs of Moher in Ireland.

Finn Scully meditated on the virtues of tweed outerwear (and being a good sport) while visiting Kamakura, Japan.

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Swceney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleck and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of t he three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

During the Arts Ball, it looked like someone had dropped a giant box of Skittles at the converted church that houses Newton's New Art Center. The dress code was "come as your favorite color," which resulted in groups of people resembling gay pride flags, and the invitation urged guests to bring ribbon, yarn and other materials to weave into a collaborative artwork that one attendee got to take home.

An elaborate dinner was followed by a jam-packed dance party, and among the throng were arts aficionada Francesca Piper Koss, fine wine expert Marie Keep and her landscape designer husband, Jonathan, hotel mogul Robin Brown and the luscious Marcia, ICA mouthpiece Kate Shamon and her cue-ball husband, Andy Rushford, bicoastal Brahmin Sukey Forbes and the dead sexy Kevin O'Leary, design avatar Urit Chaimovitz, and Skinner Auctioneers head honcha Karen Keane, whose husband, Dan Elias, runs the joint.

The dance floor sizzled with suburbanites bustin' their illest moves, and despite a rather hilarious conversation about circumcision, the evening's funniest remark came from a woman accused of ignoring the evening's theme, who replied, "I did not. Diamonds are my favorite color."

PAGING NATALIE PORTMAN

There are opening nights, and then there are Opening Nights, and it was definitely the latter when Boston Ballet premiered its brand-new production of Swan Lake.

At the Avery Bar at the Ritz, a cocktail reception congratulating artistic director Mikko Nissinen and his hot new executive director, Max Hodges, drew their opposite numbers at the National Ballet of Canada, Karen Kain and Barry Hughson, power pair Richard and Diane Schmalensee, design mogul Denise Korn, the ubiquitous Janet Wu, brunette stunner Eve Rounds, ballet booster Mark Goldweitz and both of his beautiful wives, Joyce (the current) and Jill (the ex), the latter's suave main man, Morris Levitt, board chair Jack Meyer, petite bombshell Lisa Blumenthal and her handsome other half, Tom, the uber-fabulous Pam Lazares, Beacon Hillions Liz and Peter Georgantas, and every other balletomane and dance enthusiast in Boston.

After imbibing freely, everyone headed over to the Opera House for the world premiere, which earned an insane standing ovation, followed by a party back at the Ritz, the likes of which one rarely sees on a school night.

In the midst of all the dancing and drinking, one guest said, "A lot of women seem to have opted for the black swan look this evening," to which her friend responded, "Yes. But a few of them look more like geese."

BEATS WORCESTER

Everyone can agree that cancer sucks, but rare cancers especially suck, since there are fewer treatment options and lower survival rates.

The TargetCancer Foundation, which addresses this problem, hosted its annual gala at the Microsoft New England Research and Development Center in Cambridge, which is much less corporate and way sexier than it sounds. Tasting stations dotted the space-age interior, where one could mingle with the likes of the organization's head honcho, Jim Palma, and his sister, Kristen Poth (whose husband's death spurred the foundation's creation), Cambridge yummy mummy Liza Tague and her finance guru husband, James, rock-star researcher James Bradner, emcee Susan Wornick, tireless do-gooders Stephen Weiner and Donald Cornuet, bubbler mogul Simon O'Leary with toothsome blonde Chris Cardwell, celebrity chef Chris Fischer (whose Martha's Vineyard restaurant, the Beach Plum, provided the food), newly elected state Rep. Michael Day, enough lawyers to fill a courthouse and a lot of people who spend their days trying to kill cancer in people and their nights trying to keep it alive in a petri dish.

Between the lobster rolls, the raw bar, the cheese board and the dessert buffet, there was more to eat than a Sunday night at an Italian grandmother's, and the jazz trio was worth the price of admission.

The evening's archest remark: "You live in Wayland? What an easy commute! It only takes what—four hours?" ◆

PRESENT MOMENT

SMALL BUSINESS SATURDAY HAS COME and gone, but you wouldn't know it at the Improper offices, where we've been working on a special installment of our annual gift guide. Robin Reilly gathered bling bedecked with tiny gold barnacles, a salad bowl made from a fallen tree, a Navy-approved peacoat, glassware carefully etched with Boston street maps and myriad other treasures, each made by a local artisan or manufacturer, most sold at an indie shop or by the makers themselves. It's a small but stunning sample of the talent in these parts and, we hope, a source of inspiration for your shopping list. And there are plenty more holiday happenings in this issue. Lydia Santangelo serves up a festive fashion spread, full of glittering looks to light up a New Year's night out. Meghan Kavanaugh explores a very high-tech Hanukkah celebration. I check in with a new toy company born out of a university lab, one that's aiming to introduce 6-year-olds to basic programming principles. And Jonathan Soroff chats with Berklee alum Kiesza, the up-and-coming singer who's swinging back through town this month for the Jingle Ball. Hope it's a full and fun holiday season for you too.

A HIGH-TECH TOY, UNWRAPPED »»

Coding for the Kindergarten Set

As a professor in Tufts' Eliot Pearson Department of Child Development, Marina Umaschi Bers is accustomed to presenting research to fellow academics. But when she started sharing her work on KIBO—a programmable robot designed to be developmentally appropriate for kids ages 4 to 7—her colleagues' reactions weren't quite what she expected. "I'm presenting my slides, and people would raise their hands, and I was waiting for the questions on the statistics and significant results," she recalls. "But always the first question is 'How can I get one?'"

Until recently, they couldn't. KIBO started out as a hand-built prototype, reflecting years of work by Bers and her students at Tufts' DevTech research group. They went through three generations of development, drawing on feedback from more than 400 kids and 50 teachers at local schools. The result: a robot kids can assemble, decorate and command, using a programming language built on wooden blocks, each representing a different action. "There's no computer, no keyboard, no screens of any kind," Bers explains. Instead, kids snap the blocks into a sequence and scan the bar code on each using the "mouth" of the KIBO, which also comes with sensors shaped like an ear (for sound), an eye (for light) and a telescope (for gauging distance). Press a button and presto: The robot can wheel around, beep, sing, shake, spin and flash colored lights, mimicking a ballerina, a helicopter, a dogsled or whatever else its pint-sized programmer imagines.

The team developed complementary curricula, and the response convinced Bers to take KIBO out of the lab. So she teamed up with her friend Mitch Rosenberg—a veteran of Automatix Inc., Kiva Systems and Rethink Robotics—to found KinderLab Robotics. With help from a Small Business Innovation Research grant and this summer's successful Kickstarter campaign, which raised nearly $30K more than its $50,000 goal, the Arlington-based startup has begun commercial production of KIBO kits ($229-$399). "There are wonderful things for older children," Bers says, "but there was nothing like this for this age range." She hopes KIBO is just the beginning. "We need more of these technologies for young children. Research shows that by fourth grade, stereotypes about who's going to be good at math, science and engineering are already formed." The first shipments began this month, so some future STEM whizzes may soon find a new friend under the tree. / Jacqueline Houton

Seared Duck Breast and Confit Leg Red Curry, $24 at Pon Thai Bistro, 213 Washington St., Brookline (617 608 3593) ponthaibistro.com

Good Eats: Mighty Duck

Pon Thai Bistro, the restaurant that Sivika "Pon" Hunter opened last month, doesn't simply fill the Thai cuisine void in Brookline Village—it happily strays off the grid of conventional Bangkok-style dishes. To wit, her red curry, where she doubles up on the duck with a crisp-seared breast and an ultra-tender confit leg, a preparation that speaks to her Thai roots and her classic French training at Cambridge Culinary. The curry paste is some of the best around (fragrant and fiery with galangal, lime leaves and chilies), and the coconut milk-enriched gravy is loaded with butternut squash, crisp-tender cauliflower, snow peas and red bell pepper. / Elizabeth Bomze

FUSE Koy's influences vary, but an emphasis on strong Korean flavors runs throughout.

PLAYING KOY

A KOREAN-LEANING SPOT'S SERENDIPITOUS START

116 North St., Boston.
koyboston.com

When general manager Catarina Chang came up with the name for new restaurant Koy, she had the word "coy" in mind. And while the dimly lit setting, with large pieces of art positioned on dark purple walls, may help set that subtly flirtatious mood, the mingling will truly matter in the kitchen. Chef Sebastian Martinez (Volle Nolle) is ready to mix different styles and flavors at the Korean fusion spot, expected to open this month near Faneuil Hall.

"The amount of Korean or fusion is different for each dish," Martinez says. "It might be 90 percent Korean with a little touch of this or that at the end. Or it might be 20 percent Korean, with a French or Spanish influence on the rest of the dish."

One constant will be strong Korean flavors from ingredients such as ginger, garlic, scallion and gochujang. Sweetness, salt and spice will meet in dishes such as the crab udon, featuring noodles, corn, crab and butter in fish broth. The menu will be broken down into small, medium and large shareable plates, with prices primarily in the teens. Dessert lovers can look forward to items like French toast with peanuts boiled in coffee, sesame seeds and chocolate. But beyond the flavors, it's also Korean technique that intrigues Martinez.

"Fermentation is a big thing right now. There's a lot of debate on if kimchee is just cabbage. The way I look at it, you can kimchee anything. It's a process more than anything," he says. "So, it'll be kind of cool to mess around with more local ingredients. For example, making kimchee out of stuff that grows in New England."

The Korean influence will carry over to the cocktails, with soju (a Korean rice liquor) the star of the bar program. Bar manager Lily Pereira plans to offer soju by the bottle (375 ml), use it in the sangria and infuse it with different flavors. A broader range of cocktails, beer and mostly Californian wines will round out the drink list, lending some mainstream appeal for the crowd that might be milling around Faneuil Hall.

"We're trying to make everyone happy with fusion," Martinez says. "We'll have a little something for everyone."

For Chang, that theme of fusion extends to mixing business with family. Her brother Daniel (a RISD grad) painted a glass mural next to the bar and will serve as a manager, while her father, Danny, is the owner. Even Martinez was brought on through a familial connection.

"My brother's neighbor's younger sister's best friend is Catarina," he says. "I guess the word is serendipity."

Dish / Carolyn Faye Fox

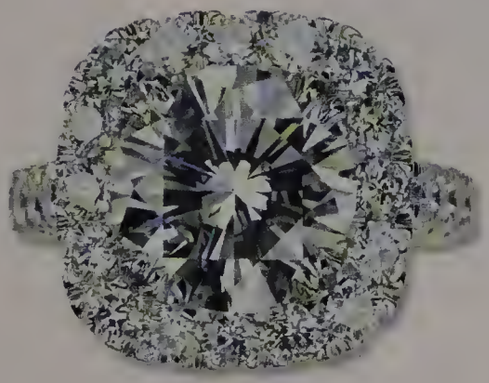
6TH GEAR HITS SOUTHIE

Despite the name, it's not a food truck—or a delivery service. Instead, South Boston's forthcoming 6th Gear will be a restaurant with steampunk-themed decor, a modern American menu with a range of plate sizes and a beer/wine/cordials license. And it won't subtitle itself with the familiar "Kitchen and Bar," but with "Cask and Kitchen."

"It'll be awesome," promises Kristi Cozza, a co-owner with her father, Southie resident Darryl Cozza. "Between us, we have really great experience in business, restaurants and entertainment," she says. "We thought, 'Hey, let's put our heads together and make it happen.'" The name, she explains, is meant to connote "high-end, fast vehicles," although prices will be reasonable. The dining room will seat 44, with an additional 10 seats at the bar. 6th Gear won't feature "bar food like you usually find in Southie," she says, adding that chef Matt Garon—"he's been all over the world: Thailand, the Middle East, Hong Kong"—is still putting the final touches on the menu. Watch for 6th Gear to open at 81 L St. (in the old Sauce space) by mid-January. Dinner and Sunday brunch will be served, with lunch service a possibility in the future.



ALOHA MEANS GOODBYE

In Dorchester news, Nuno Alves has resigned as chef de cuisine at Tavolo—a position he's held since 2009—and is preparing to move to Hawaii. "This has always been Nuno's plan," says Tavolo owner Chris Douglass, "and I am frankly surprised that he stayed with us as long as he did." Alves' wife is originally from Hawaii, and the couple plans to be settled in Oahu by early January. Meanwhile, Douglass is narrowing the field of chef replacements, and he promises the tight-knit kitchen crew will keep things running smoothly.

VIRTUALLY POSSIBLE: Museum goers will have a chance to try this on.

SHAMASH-ING WORK

The Matrix meets the Maccabees at the Museum of Fine Arts on Dec. 17, when an art installation offers a high-tech take on the menorah—complete with an Oculus Rift virtual reality headset. Staged as part of the museum's free Hanukkah celebration, Across the Divide invites visitors to act as the ninth candle—the shamash—by controlling lights and sounds around the room. The viewer wearing the Oculus Rift, meanwhile, sees a digital interpretation of the room, engaging the rest of the exhibit with simple turns of the head and producing complementary music and light. "Our hope is that it sort of starts to connect into larger issues of the nature of communication," says artist Jeff Hesser, who worked on the project alongside Mike Mendel and Guy Mendilow. "The fact that people from different contexts can communicate with each other at all...that's kind of a miracle itself." The trio's futuristic piece is also a sign of things to come: It's acting as a preview of sorts for 8 Nights, 8 Windows, a public art project that's in the works for next December. / Meghan Kavanaugh

Purveyors: Hot as Fire

Whether you're a shrub aficionado, looking to liven up a ho-hum vinaigrette or hoping to bust up a head cold, Fire Cider should be in your pantry. Berkshires-based husband-and-wife team Dana St. Pierre and Amy Huebner's take on the traditional New England health tonic is particularly spicy and complex, thanks to a base of apple-cider vinegar and honey that's laced with habanero chili, horseradish, ginger, onions, garlic and turmeric, plus lemon and orange for fruity balance. The scent alone packs a bracing punch, and a straight shot burns real good. / Elizabeth Bomze

Q&A
DESIGNING WOMEN

You are what you wear. That's the idea behind Women in Clothes, a book boasting contributors such as Lena Dunham that explores the ways women present themselves through style. We polled two local contributors, writers Jill Gallagher and Ren Jender*, before they join a panel discussion and clothing swap at Harvard Book Store on Jan. 16. /* Alexandra Cavallo

WHY'D YOU GET INVOLVED WITH THE BOOK? REN JENDER: Even though I'm someone whose demographic screams "not interested in fashion"—anti-capitalist, queer and (now) 50—I actually think clothes and fashion are really important, not shallow, concerns. JILL GALLAGHER: [The idea] immediately appealed to me. I write a blog called Looks & Books, which was founded on the idea that what one wears is a fundamental aspect of their identity.

WHAT DOES PERSONAL STYLE MEAN TO YOU? JG: It's a way for a person to show how it is they want to be seen in the world. It's like that old maxim: "Dress for the job you want, not the job you have." That concept of aspiration applies to style in every facet of life—not just the office, but the classroom, the subway and even the bedroom. If you think about it, every article of clothing, piece of jewelry or pair of shoes we own has a story, and we choose the stories we want to tell every day when we get dressed.

NAME ONE WOMAN WHOSE STYLE YOU ADMIRE. RJ: Can I choose someone fictional? I always loved Emma Peel, played by Diana Rigg, in reruns of the British TV show The Avengers. She wore a lot of fashionable pants and saved her crime-fighting partner as often as he saved her. I think she was maybe the one who gave me the idea that I could be fashionable but still be able to move, and be smart and competent. JG: One of my style icons right now is Tavi Gevinson because she's always had an innate sense of her own style. She started Style Rookie as a child ... I could barely find a pair of matching socks when I was that young. Instead of using her fame to become another socialite or image-obsessed fashion blogger, she launched Rookie ... and it is so good. It's a good example of how important staying true to your personal style and your sense of self can be.

Drink of the Moment

SNOWFALL IN VOIRON

BRINGING THE HEAT: Fight the winter chill with the warm embrace of rum and chocolate.

ALDEN & HARLOW
40 Brattle St., Cambridge
(617-864-2100)
aldenharlow.com

PRICE: $12

INVENTOR: Alden & Harlow bar manager Seth Freidus

INGREDIENTS: Plantation rum, Pierre Ferrand Dry Curacao, Green Chartreuse, vanilla syrup, house hot cocoa, absinthe and orange blossom water-scented whipped cream

FRIENDS IN HIGH PLACES: This drink made the menu after Freidus hit the slopes with pals. "For me, the winter just feels like a get-away from the city, and I love snowboarding. My friends and my fiance and I, we would always drink hot chocolate and rum." As for the name, Voiron is home to the mountains where Chartreuse is produced.

BETTER TOGETHER: Chocolate and vanilla always work. (Freidus blends equal parts 70 percent dark chocolate, milk powder and sugar for the cocoa mix and makes the vanilla syrup too.) But there's another great pairing here: "Green Chartreuse and chocolate, they're just a pretty classic combo."

PAIR IT WITH: Smoked chocolate bread pudding with salted vanilla ice cream ($9).

HOUSE RULES: "We make everything in-house," Freidus says. "We make our own Falernum, our own orgeat. We make our own spiced rum." And they recently ditched Baileys for their own Irish cream.

WARM UP TO WINTER: The mercury may be dropping, but Freidus and his staff aren't slowing down. When it comes to switching up the menu, he says, "I want to say seasonally, but honestly we change the cocktail list weekly or biweekly." The team works backward: "We see what the chef's working with and make sure the menus are aligned, flavor-wise." Freidus is looking to add more hot beverages to lineup; keep an eye out for a whiskey tipple coming soon. / Sarah Hagman

OFF THE WALL

The titans of 20th-century art didn't confine their work to canvas. That's clear from the fashions and furnishings featured in Artist Textiles: Picasso to Warhol, a newly opened exhibit at Lowell's American Textile History Museum. On loan from the Fashion and Textile Museum in London, it gathers 200 rarely seen pieces—skirts and scarves, rugs and bed sheets, ties and tablecloths—that brought modern art to the masses. PLEASURE FROM PAIN

A TURNING POINT BRINGS NEW POSSIBILITIES IN A BEST-SELLING AUTHOR'S LATEST MEMOIR.

New Life, No Instructions* by Gail Caldwell
Published by Random House, 164 pages, $23

HAVING HAD POLIO AS A BABY, GAIL Caldwell didn't walk until she was 2. The years of exercises that followed led to a life of relatively normalcy, though she walked with a limp, with one leg 1.5 inches shorter than the other.

Then, in her late 50s, the Pulitzer Prize winner and former Boston Globe book critic found herself hobbled by pain at an already difficult time. She'd lost her parents, her dog Clementine and her beloved friend, fellow writer and rower Caroline Knapp. Tula, a new Samoyed, brought merriment into her life, but as their relationship developed, her mobility declined. Finally, an X-ray at age 60 revealed an "explosion of white" in her hip, a "junkyard of bone." That, not her leg, had been causing the pain and required replacement.

Changing your life, Caldwell observes, is "like trying to turn an ocean liner around and using a fork for a fulcrum." But as this memoir reveals, her life did change, dramatically, in ways she couldn't have imagined. Supported by crutches and a "parade of comfort" from friends, she triumphed over the acute physical challenges of the surgery, learning to walk again and "beating" polio's cruel effects decades after the fact. The grace of Caldwell's writing parallels the grace of movement she finally achieved, making reading about her pain actually inviting.

FROM PAGE 125: Maybe this absolute embrace comes from my having had and lost Caroline; I know now that our friendship was something precious and unfounded, a grace note with my name on it, and so her death has become a part of me and my ongoing narrative and touched everything else I love: as though she knew no one could replace her, so she sent me a whole truckload of friends to help me through. ◆

MAKE HASTE

A RELAXING STAYCATION IS A QUICK JAUNT AWAY AT A LUXE LEXINGTON INN.

THERE'S SOMETHING ALMOST MAGICALLY restorative about trading business casual for a cozy robe and slippers, hanging a Do Not Disturb sign and settling into a beautifully appointed suite that's free from the everyday messiness of your own life. And if the hospitality is top-notch, you don't even have to travel far to feel transported. Such is the case at Lexington's Inn at Hastings Park, a new boutique hotel a half-hour from Boston that may as well be a world away for the staycationer, especially once you curl up in front of your fireplace, perhaps after an in-room massage or a call to room service for a split of Schramsberg blanc de blancs—a favorite at the White House.

"I like to say, if it's good enough for our guests, it's good enough for the White House," jokes owner Trisha Pérez Kennealy, a Harvard Business School grad who left a career in investment banking to attend Le Cordon Bleu and launch her catering company, Artistry. Then, last February, she opened the inn, aiming to offer "revolutionary hospitality" just a stone's throw from the Lexington Battle Green, where the first shots of the Revolutionary War were fired. So it's fitting that a subtle, sleek take on Americana runs through the decor, from the cheery wallpaper that greets you in the entrance—a modern spin on 19th-century silhouette portraiture—to the red-white-and-blue color scheme seen in some of the 22 guest rooms and suites. But the effect is far from shticky or old-fashioned: One expansive suite decked out in tufted leather, mirrored surfaces and black wallpaper studded with silver stars feels like a better fit for a (tasteful) rock star than a founding father.

Decorated by Lexington interior designer Robin Gannon, the accommodations start at $275 nightly and stretch through three restored buildings: the Main House, built in 1888; the Isaac Mulliken House, named for the 19th-century politician who called it home; and the Barn, said to have once housed a casket factory. Each room is a bit different, but all are bright, airy and furnished with regional finds—blankets woven in Maine, colorful candelabras from Connecticut's Dunes and Duchess—along with modern comforts like swiveling flat-screen TVs, iPod docks and showers equipped with both rainfall and handheld showerheads. It's the sort of setting where you're not surprised to see the toilet paper twirled into an artful rosette. (No mere triangle fold here!)

Tempting as it may be to hole up in your room, a visit to the inn's 54-seat restaurant, Artistry on the Green, is a must. Pull up one of the Windsor chairs and start with a locally brewed beer from Night-shift, Battle Road or Cambridge Brewing Company, or perhaps a cocktail like the Apothecary's Remedy, made with Rebellion bourbon, rhubarb syrup, ginger beer, orange blossom water and bitters. Try not to fill up on the toothsome carbs from tiny Lexington bakery Bread Obsession, as you'll want room for the farm-to-fork fare of chef Mathew Molloy. An alum of Lumière and Beacon Hill Bistro, he makes a mean clam chowder with New England quahogs and salt pork, turns out tender wine-braised short ribs with piquant horseradish mashed potatoes, and serves a hearty poached-egg-topped polenta with roasted tomatoes and mushrooms that will leave vegetarians as satisfied as the omnivores across the table. The restaurant also offers a complimentary a la carte breakfast, with offerings like vanilla pancakes with orange butter and Massachusetts maple syrup.

Before or after your meal, you may opt to lounge in the neighboring first-floor library, where you can tickle the ivories on the piano or dip into classics ranging from Dr. Seuss to Walden. Speaking of Thoreau's tome, Walden Pond is just a 10-minute drive away, and there are plenty of other sights in the area. Cyclists, joggers and cross-country skiers can avail themselves of the Minuteman Bikeway, a scenic 11-mile trail along a former railway that cuts through Lexington, Arlington, Bedford and Cambridge; just ask the front desk if you care to borrow a bicycle. And within walking distance of the inn are Buckman Tavern, where the militia gathered (and presumably found some liquid courage) on April 19, 1775, and Munroe Tavern, the Redcoats' respective HQ, both of which are open for audio tours from April through November.

There's more history to be had at the nearby Concord Museum, home to a collection that includes Ralph Waldo Emerson's study and the signal light from Paul Revere's famed midnight ride, along with special exhibitions like Behind Closed Doors: Asleep in New England. On view through spring, it's a look at the varied ways we've gotten shut-eye over the centuries, featuring all manner of nightclothes, coverlets and cradles (for adults as well as infants). After perusing those artifacts, you may be all the more appreciative when you snuggle back into the plush bedding at the inn, where Kennealy, true to form, tested more than 20 mattresses, Goldilocks-style, to find just the right one. ◆

VIALE
502 Mass. Ave
Cambridge | 617-576-1900
viecambridge.com

After you've been dining out in Boston for a few years, you may notice that certain locations seem haunted by the specters of previous tenants. When a beloved restaurant closes, it's sometimes hard to warm to its successor: Memories of great meals of yore can cast a pall over the new enterprise. That notion must have crossed the minds of chef-owner Greg Reeves and GM/co-owner Mark Young when they opened Mediterranean newcomer Viale in the former home of the long-running Rendezvous in Central Square. They needn't have feared. A couple of months in, Viale already feels like a very comfy fit for its cosmopolitan neighborhood, with the kitchen and bar turning out terrific food and drink like it's been there for a decade.

Bar manager Patrick Gaggiano sets the tone with some serious cocktail craft. His specialty list full of twisty glosses on century-old drinks. The Purple Mouve ($12) updates the margarita with mezcal, Yellow Chartreuse, lemon and the light-bodied Italian bitter Cardamaro, plus a bit of Jabby Brau for fizz. The Negroni gets a makeover in the Eldridge ($11), varied with dry and sweet vermouths and the slightly sweeter Amaro Montenegro. The Tommy Fizz ($12) gives the Ramos Fizz a novel tweak by subbing lavender for orange blossom in its mix of Old Tom gin, lime and the creamy foam of egg white.

Small plates lean toward potent proteins like a special of fried smelts ($11), a late entrant in the Appetizer of the Year sweepstakes. The three fat, mature, barely breaded specimens—six inches with their heads off—are tender enough to eat whole (tail included), and despite the presence of good aioli require no more than a squeeze of lemon: eminently simple and fresh, just about perfect. A dozen small bay scallops ($18), pan-roasted beautifully brown, nestle celery-root puree topped with shaved apple. Plump barnacle shrimp ($13) are a delightful idea, adding North African spice and chili heat to pan-seared crunch, gorgeously contrasted with sweet, sour kumquat relish and caramelized parsnips. A plate of antipasti ($17) features insistently hot soppressata, extraordinary corned beef tongue and the mild comfort of white bean puree. Crispy veal sweetbreads ($13) register almost as rich and refined as foie gras despite a rustic underpinning of lentils, chestnuts and apple butter.

Pastas, especially in half portions, serve as fabulous mid-courses, as in the baked paccheri ($13 half, $21 whole), which look like big, flattish rigatoni and are sauced with a stunning ragù of long-simmered lamb and caramelized fennel, topped with thick shavings of salty, grainy, Parmesan-like grana. Saffron fettuccine ($15 half, $24 whole) is lighter, with thick, flat pasta ribbons and goodly chunks of lobster, squid, chili and rapini leaves in a bright tomato sauce—Fra Diavolo by way of Valencia.

Entrees centered on pristine cuts of meat and seafood show similarly fine execution, often boasting a welcome hint of wood-fire smoke and benefiting from classic pan sauces. Grilled Giannone chicken ($23) is a good example: a crisp-skinned Statler breast and thigh simply accompanied by more fire-kissed Brussels sprouts, grilled carrots and an excellent lemon jus. Steelhead trout ($24) is a rare example of farmed fish that is as flavorful as wild-caught, a gorgeous skin-on fillet resting on really fine mushroom risotto, crowned with grilled rapini and touched with balsamic brown butter. Wood grilling gives the skin on a duck breast ($27) good char and crispness without rendering out too much fat or cooking the flesh past pink; it rests on a fascinating mix of textures in chestnut puree and fried quinoa dotted with honey-glazed turnips. Calotte steak ($21) takes a prized, rarely seen, very tender cut of beef (rib-eye cap) and handles it with almost backyard simplicity, long marinating it in oil, garlic, rosemary and bay before giving it the black-and-blue treatment: fire-charred but otherwise quite rare, served with thick slices of wine-braised onions and creamy polenta. It's a brilliant bargain of a steak.

The tight, affordable wine list, with 45 bottles ($32-$84, most under $50) and a dozen by the glass ($9-$13), offers creditable accompaniments. We paired the salmon-like heft of the trout with the crisp minerality of a 2011 Amizade godello ($10 glass, $40 bottle), a nice-priced Galician white, and the buttery beefiness of the calotte with a 2010 Chateau Teynac ($84), an inky, velvety cabernet merlot blend that evokes more glorious Bordeaux reds without requiring a second mortgage.

Some welcome holdovers remain. The space, while lightened up in its surfaces, is still airy and lively without being overloud; the wide bar is built more for diners than drinkers. Likewise, service reflects professional polish paired with the friendly informality that seems to characterize every good indie on this side of the Charles. Having gotten out of the blocks quickly to a very smooth start, Viale appears to have cracked the code on how to exorcise the ghost of your predecessor and win over its crestfallen regulars: Live up to its legacy by wrapping exceptional cooking and bartending in a cozy neighborhood feel. Steve Johnson would doubtless be proud. ◆

Q: I WOULD LIKE TO LOOK MY BEST FOR THE HOLIDAYS AND HAVE BEEN THINKING ABOUT TRYING BOTOX. ARE THE RESULTS INSTANT?

A: Botulinum toxins are wonderful treatments for men and women who want to reduce their frown lines in order to look less stressed or tired. The brand names are: Botox , Dysport, and Xeomin.

The treatment involves small injections into the muscles that cause the frown lines. It takes just a few minutes, and the results are visible in about three days as the muscles relax, reducing or eliminating your frown lines. Since the effects of Botox or Dysport will last at least three months (and in many cases much longer), you can have the treatment done now and you will be good for the season.

Botox is most commonly used to treat the "11s", vertical lines between the eyebrows; frown lines on the forehead; and crow's feet, the crinkly lines at the side of our eyes. Done properly, it does not look fake or give you a "frozen" look; you simply more rested (therefore younger!)

ENIGMATIC

THE IMITATION GAME ★★★

Starring Benedict Cumberbatch, Keira Knightley, Matthew Goode, Rory Kinnear, Allen Leech, Matthew Beard, Alex Lawther, Jack Bannon, Charles Dance and Mark Strong. Written by Graham Moore, based on Andrew Hodges' book Alan Turing: The Enigma of Intelligence. Directed by Morten Tyldum. At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.

THE IMITATION GAME SPENDS SO MUCH time setting up complex puzzles that it oversimplifies the life of its central enigma: Alan Turing, a British genius posthumously regarded as a father of the modern computer, a man who envisioned the possibility of artificial intelligence. Fortunately, Turing is played by Benedict Cumberbatch, who expertly fleshes out what's left off the script in another one of his deeply cerebral performances as a tortured intellect who sits to the left of center of society's norms.

Most of the film is set during World War II, when Turing, the self-described "top mathematician in the world," was enlisted by MI6 to toil as a cryptanalyst. He joins a brilliant team racing to crack the supposedly unbreakable Nazi codes of Germany's Enigma machine at a top-secret location in Bletchley Park—or, as Turing sees them, "half a dozen crossword enthusiasts in a small village in the south of London."

Based on the way he places himself at odds with every character in the film (save another outsider played by Keira Knightley), Turing may have had a touch of Asperger's. But it's his hidden homosexuality that serves as the key piece to the puzzle constructed by director Morten Tyldum and screenwriter Graham Moore, who freely adapted a biography by Andrew Hodges, a mathematician and activist in the '70s gay liberation movement.

As the film opens, it's 1951, and Detective Robert Nock (Rory Kinnear of recent James Bond films) arrives at Turing's home to investigate a burglary. Turing insists that nothing has been stolen, but the detective senses that the mathematician doth protest too much and begins investigating Turing instead. As Nock probes the mystery of this strange man, the film flashes back to a 1939 meeting between Commander Denniston (Game of Thrones' Charles Dance) and the socially awkward Turing at an office at the Bletchley Radio Manufacturing building, the HQ for the secret team of scholars, linguists, intelligence officers and chess champions in possession of an Enigma machine that was smuggled out of Poland.

The group is led by Hugh Alexander (Matthew Goode of TV's The Good Wife), who tells Turing he believes he's made some progress with the machine. "Even a broken clock is correct twice a day," Turing replies, not making any friends as he calculates that there are "159 million, million, million possibilities" for code encryption within the Enigma.

Turing may have had a touch of Asperger's. But it's his hidden homosexuality that serves as the key piece to the puzzle.

It's not long before Turing's colleagues have filed a formal complaint against him with Denniston, who doesn't much like him either. Turing's response? "Get rid of them," he tells Denniston, who bristles when Turing instructs him to use the potential savings to fund his hypothetical machine, "the bombe," which could theoretically exploit tiny weaknesses in the Enigma's coding.

"Who is your superior?" Turing demands to know when Denniston refuses to take orders.

"Winston Churchill," comes his smug response.

The next time we see Denniston, he's in his office, looking dour as he announces to the assembled team that Turing has been appointed the division's new leader, usurping a very pissed-off Alexander. Calling Denniston's bluff, Turing had given a letter to MI6 agent Stewart Menzies (Tinker Tailor Soldier Spy's Mark Strong) to deliver directly into the hands of Churchill. Turing's first order of business? Firing two of the group's dead-weight members.

"You must have been popular in school," Menzies dryly observes as the movie dips into one of many flashbacks-within-a-flashback, set at the boarding school where Turing spent his youth. Played in these scenes by Alex Lawther, the quiet loner obsesses over keeping peas and carrots separated on his dinner plate, only to have the food dumped on his head by bullies, when they aren't busy trapping him beneath the school's floorboards. But the young Turing has a protector: classmate Christopher Morcom (Jack Bannon), who gives him a book on codes and ciphers, becoming his sole companion and the object of the ginger-haired outcast's pubescent longings.

Back at Bletchley Park, Turing recruits Joan Clarke (Knightley), and the two form a close bond, even as (or perhaps because) she correctly pegs him as a "fragile narcissist." Goaded on by this "woman in a man's job," he attempts to endear himself to his colleagues as they inch toward the breakthrough that would help save thousands of lives, telling jokes (terribly) and offering them shiny apples as treats.

Hodges' book reveals that the real Turing had always been fascinated by the scene in Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs where the evil queen dips an apple into poison. Given the obvious foreshadowing with the apples handed out by Cumberbatch's Turing, along with the cyanide he handles at one point, it's a real head-scratcher why neither Moore nor Tyldum—who displayed a dark wit with his last picture, the Norwegian noir Headhunters—thought to end their film at what would seem to be its natural conclusion.

As a result of Nock's investigation, Turing was sentenced for indecency as a "sodomite" in '52. On-screen text informs us of his tragic suicide at the age of 41, a year after he began government-mandated "chemical castration," 57 years before he'd be issued a government apology and 62 years before he'd be granted a pardon. It's a very conventional ending to a film about a complex, puzzling life.

What we don't see is that Turing died of cyanide poisoning—a half-eaten apple beside him, foam coating his mouth, no prince to save him. ◆

TOWN POOL

The large Greenhouse next to Faneuil Hall is finally full ... it's a grand Holiday Pop-up Shop.

The TownPool Pop-up originated on Nantucket. The enterprising owners filled the Greenhouse with antiques and exclusive brands that are nearly impossible to find. It's like nothing we've ever seen ... you got to see it to believe it.

It's only open for the Holidays.

MAGIC MAN
plays the Sinclair on Dec. 19.

THE MAGIC TOUCH

NEWTON-BRED UPSTARTS TRADE A LAPTOP FOR A MAJOR-LABEL RIDE.

IT'S BEEN A WHIRLWIND YEAR FOR LOCAL electro-rock quintet Magic Man, from playing May's Boston Calling festival to touring nationally behind its major-label debut Before the Waves, released in July. "We've been really lucky," says co-founding guitarist/keyboardist Sam Lee. "But we work really hard."

Lee and the band's ebullient singer, Alex Caplow, have been making music since they were classmates in Newton, cracking the local rock scene through house parties. "That's really where we cut our live teeth," says Lee, 24. "We came to appreciate the amazing, sweaty atmosphere you get in those shows. People have a great time dancing, and even though we're now playing much bigger venues with real PAs and actual stages, we bring some of that basement-show energy."

They hope to tap some of that intimate vibe when Magic Man returns to play the Sinclair on Dec. 19. It's an all-ages "First Annual Holiday Party" with local friends Gentlemen Hall and the Novel Ideas, whose guitarist/vocalist Daniel Radin played bass on Before the Waves. The bands also play the night before at the Fete Lounge in Providence, Magic Man's alternate base, where the group relocated before hopping its wave.

"We'll all be back home for the holidays," Lee says from Seattle. "We're definitely going to try to make it an annual thing, a way to celebrate what's hopefully a good year with friends, family and also bands from our hometown."

Travel agrees with Magic Man, which even wove "Texas," "Paris," "Nova Scotia" and "Chicagoland" into song titles. "There's always been a bit of wanderlust to the band," Lee says. "We love traveling. That's why being on tour is so much fun." In fact, the band took root when the Newton friends spent a summer in France during college, volunteering on an organic farm in exchange for room and board.

"We'd take an extended siesta in the middle of the day when it's particularly hot, so to pass the time, we ended up working on tunes on my laptop in GarageBand and really liked what we came up with," Lee says. "Alex and I have been playing music together since we knew how to play the guitar. We had the same guitar teacher in middle school and learned how to play in bands together, but this is just sort of the first thing that really felt like it stuck."

"Even though we're now playing much bigger venues with real PAs... we bring some of that basement-show energy."

They brought home those European demos, which evolved into Magic Man's 2010 self-produced debut EP Real Life Color, and began performing with a laptop and the occasional guitar or keyboards, "kinda like karaoke over a backing track," Lee says. But that's not what the duo really wanted to do. "We loved playing in rock bands, and we wanted to take our live show in more exciting directions."

They expanded into a full band, more in line with grand indie-rock influences that included Arcade Fire and Explosions in the Sky. Yet Magic Man's bright, synth-heavy sound most closely falls between the Killers and Passion Pit—"definitely another influence for us as another band coming out of the Boston area," Lee says, "right as we were graduating from high school."

Magic Man even tapped Passion Pit producer Alex Aldi for Before the Waves. "We had access to those techniques," Lee says. "It was great because he knows that music so well, he made sure we weren't treading too close." The resulting album brims with sleek, swelling synths, its melodic hooks built around youthful, euphoric phrases like "sun-kissed light," "Shout, shout, shout together" and "The morning sky has never seemed so clear." It all seems primed for daytime dancing.

"We definitely have a taste for epic, triumphant music," Lee says. And now, with fellow Newton native Gabe Goodman on bass, North Andover's Justine Bowe on keyboards and drummer Joey Sulkowski, they've ditched the backing tracks.

"We felt a lot more freedom," he says. "There are inherently some layers that you just can't reproduce live, and that was a conscious decision on our part, to focus more on the energy of a live rock band." ◆

HOW I MET YOUR MOTHER

MY TAKE ON TINDER... AND AN EVEN UNLIKELIER CUPID.

FROM THE OUTSIDE LOOKING IN, THE Tinder dating app sounds awesome. When I was single, the barroom cold call was always my worst nightmare. Perhaps I had too much empathy, but my attitude was this: "You don't want to talk to me? I don't blame you! I wouldn't want to talk to me either. I shall now return to playing Golden Tee." I lack the huckster inclinations required to pursue that initial introduction.

Tinder seems like it would've been the answer to my problems. By mutual acceptance, the comely specimen at the end of the bar (or the bar down the street, or the gym, or the next stop on the T) grants permission for dialogue. From there it's up to you, but you've vaulted the wall of indifference that urban people erect to maintain their sanity. Awesome deal, right?

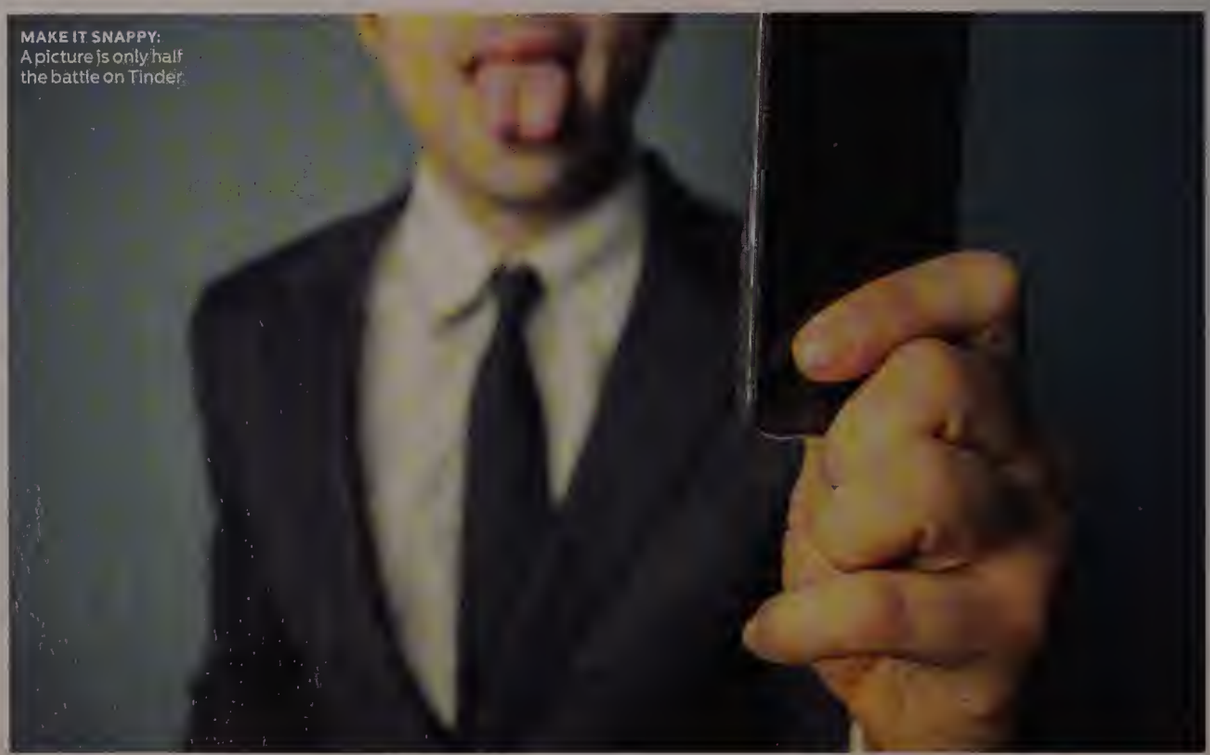
Not completely, according to a female friend whose identity I vowed to conceal, except to describe her as "independent, successful, hilarious and strikingly beautiful." She recently quit Tinder after a year, mainly because it was too exhausting. She says she "matched" with 600 guys and chatted with about 300. And her search parameters were pretty narrowly defined: male, age 33 to 42, located within nine miles and "no pictures holding dead animals, except maybe a fish." Other deal killers included naked bathroom selfies and photos with cars but no people in them, because, she says, "That just smacks of douchebaggery. Nobody thinks that R8 has your name on the title."

Still, Tinder did its job. During the year, she went on 25 dates, and most of the guys were nice enough. But the chemistry just didn't align—sometimes the guy wanted a second (or third) date but she didn't; sometimes it was the other way around. In only one case did she blow off a date, when she was on her way there and the guy texted, "DTF?" That story makes me feel like I grew up in a chaste Jane Austen novel, where you wouldn't know if someone was DTF until at least the entree.

In fact, how did people even meet before social media and smartphones? Personally, I subscribed to the theory that I should say yes to almost any proposed date, because the worst outcome would be a bad first date and a good story. So I went on a blind date orchestrated by an Improper reader.

In retrospect, it was a bizarre situation: An Improper reader named Brian sent me an email saying that, based on what he knew of me from my column, I'd get along great with a co-worker of his named Heather. It would've been all too easy to dismiss Brian's proposal, but I figured I had nothing to lose by pursuing the lead from this unlikely Cupid. Also, he made her sound really hot. It was a good pitch. We've been married eight years.

My attitude at that point was fundamentally the same as anybody who's on Tinder today—you have to be optimistic and maybe take a few long shots, because the night you say no might be the night you miss meeting somebody great. Torment yourself with that idea and you start going out a lot.



The question posed by the current dating landscape is whether there can be too much of a good thing, whether Tinder's endless possibilities present their own kind of dilemma. Like what if you have an off night? You're probably not getting a second chance. On the other hand, 10 years ago there were a lot of those one-month relationships where you're both trying to talk yourselves into it even though you know better. I had one of those in which my roommate, Dave, said of my then-girlfriend, "She should wear a helmet." Today, that would've probably been a Tinder one-and-out, but back then you did your due diligence, sometimes to a fault.

With dating there's always a fine line between putting in the effort and getting burned out. And Tinder dates require extra work because, after all, you're meeting someone who exists only as a profile on your phone. My now post-Tinder friend explains, "I think the difference between Tinder and meeting organically is that when you meet at the gym or the bar or the produce section, you know immediately if you would maybe like to see that person naked, and it only takes a little longer than that to determine if you find them interesting, entertaining or inspiring—the vetting process is immediate. Whereas, with Tinder, in order to answer those questions you have to put in the effort online first, then meet them, and it's probable that, even after all that, it will come to nothing."

So Tinder solves some problems while creating others. In that respect, it's like every other matchmaking innovation in history, from 8 Minute Dating to the personal ad immortalized by Rupert Holmes in "Escape (The Pina Colada Song)." Now those lyrics get funnier every year. They'd make a great Tinder profile. ◆

Soroff On / Kiesza

POP ROCKS

THE CHART-TOPPER TALKS MADONNA COMPARISONS, COVERING HADDAWAY AND HER LOVE OF ZED.

NEWLY ANOINTED POP PRINCESS KIESZA, 25, WAS BORN and raised in Calgary, Canada. At age 15, an injury ended her dreams of pursuing a career in ballet. By 16, she was working on a 132-foot tall ship, and she joined the Royal Canadian Navy the next year. She won a Top Shot marksmanship competition, and the Army wanted to train her as a sniper—but by then, music had become a major part of her life. She wrote her first song at 18 and earned a scholarship to Berklee School of Music. Although she started out with a folk sound, earlier this year she teamed up with producer and fellow Berklee alum Rami Samir Afuni to release the deep-house-influenced hit "Hideaway," which debuted at number one on the UK dance charts. She's since performed throughout Europe, written for artists like Rihanna and released her debut studio album, Sound of a Woman.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So is being anointed the new pop princess a little overwhelming?
KIESZA: It's definitely been like a nuclear bomb exploding. A lot, all at once, so it was a huge adjustment. Between "Hideaway" going online in January...it's not even a year yet. It's crazy to think about. It's been an unreal, incredible experience. It's overall positive, but it's taken a lot of work and a lot of stamina.

Has anyone mistaken you for Ke$ha? No. [Laughs.] People have accidentally pronounced my name that way, but no one thought I was her.

Well, you don't have a dollar sign in your name. No, I removed the dollar sign. [Laughs.]

But you did buy yourself a consonant—your birth name was Kiesa. Why the z? I did it when I was 12. I was just kind of mad, because I thought zed was the coolest letter in the alphabet. I was kinda pissed off that I didn't have one, so I just sort of put one in my name.

"Hideaway" harks back to 1990s dance tracks. Do you wish you'd been around in 1991? I was alive. I just wasn't quite old enough to appreciate things. But I'm happy to be living when I am, because I still got that same influence, just later on.

So have you accepted Cece Peniston as your personal savior? [Laughs.] I wouldn't say she's my personal savior. Michael Jackson is. But she is way up there. I love her a lot. She's one of the 12 seated at the table.

Who's the pop star you most like to be compared to? Well, there have been Madonna comparisons, which I didn't expect, ever, and I certainly don't mind. She's amazing. But I've gotten quite a few, and most of them are really flattering.

People were amazed by the single long shot in the "Hideaway" video. Is it your ballet background or street dancing that informed that the most? I didn't start street dancing, literally, until I did the video, so I guess ballet had more influence. But now, I've been completely diving into street dance. It's definitely the core of what I'm doing, and I hope I'm getting better.

How do you feel about the category of pop star? Is that something you're comfortable being labeled as? I didn't expect to be labeled as a pop star, especially so quickly. But I don't think it's a bad label, especially because I'm a writer. Pop just stands for popular, so I guess my music's popular, and I'm definitely not against that. I would never have free-associated myself with the term pop star, though.

Lady Gaga or Katy Perry? Oh my gosh. At what point in time? I love "Bad Romance" Lady Gaga. But actually, I met Katy Perry the other day, and she was really cool. I think they're both cool in their own ways.

It was really ballsy to do a downtempo cover of "What Is Love?" Why'd you choose to do it that way? I just picked up my guitar and started playing it, and as I was singing it, I realized how sad it is. I had sung the lyrics a million times but never actually connected with it, I guess because the music is so happy. So it shocked me to feel the raw emotions of the song. Later on, I started playing it on the piano, which I think really lends itself to the song, so it was just kind of a fluke. It came at me sideways.

"I didn't expect to be labeled as a pop star, especially so quickly. But I don't think it's a bad label, especially because I'm a writer."

So pop isn't always simple? Exactly. A lot of songs have different sides to them, and that made me want to sing a lot more songs and interpret them differently. With that one, there's a whole story. It's a heartbreak song, although the Haddaway version is very upbeat. I wanted to do the lyrics and melody justice and get the real emotion to come through.

You also covered Hozier's "Take Me to Church." Heard anything from him? I actually met him in Germany, and he was so cool and so nice. He said he really liked my power, which was pretty amazing. That's one of my favorite songs this year. Melodically and lyrically speaking, I think he sets the bar high. It's a real story, and his voice is just unbelievable. I would love to collaborate with him.

What was it like the first time you heard yourself playing in a club? It was really weird. Exciting, but also very strange, because people didn't realize I was there, but they all knew the lyrics and were literally recreating the video. I was just like, "What is going on?"

Acoustic or plugged in? Do you like the pared-down or heavily produced versions of your songs? I like both. Whenever I have a DJ and a band and everything, I miss doing acoustic stuff, but if I do all acoustic stuff, I miss doing the other. They kind of balance each other out. And one is more intimate and allows you to connect with people more one-on-one, and the other is more high energy. You're really vulnerable when it's just you and a guitar.

When was the last time you went sailing? This summer. Vevo chartered a big sailboat. The skipper didn't know why I was doing everything on the boat, helping put up the sails. I even started steering. When I was getting off, he was like, "If you're interested in working on a sailboat, I'd love to hire you." [Laughs.] It was tough to say no. ◆

BMAzing.

THE VOTES ARE IN! AT LEAST, they will be when the 2014 Boston Music Awards take over the Revere Hotel for a celebration of the best of this town's sounds. The 27th annual awards show and live concert remains one of the music scene's most hotly anticipated throwdowns, recognizing talented artists in genres ranging from rock, pop and punk to hip-hop, R&B, jazz, Americana and beyond. The big night is set to include live performances by BMA nominees like our 2014 Boston's Best winner Tigerman WOAH!, recent Improper cover girl Dutch ReBelle, Rock 'n' Roll Rumble winners the Goddamn Draculas, Hallelujah the Hills, Creaturos (pictured here) and lots more. Plus, Boston's beloved Keytar Bear will come out of hibernation to present a special tribute to the Artist of the Year nominees. (Please, everyone keep your paws to yourselves.) It all goes down on Dec. 14 at the Revere, and proceeds benefit the Music Drives Us Foundation. / Alexandra Cavallo

LAUGHING ALL THE WAY

Let's face it: The holidays are weird. Relatives you barely know get way too drunk, other relatives give you strange gifts you have to pretend to love and grown-ups dress in various iterations of Santa-themed formalwear. Sometimes you just have to laugh at it all. And drink eggnog. Lot's of eggnog. The funny folks at ImprovBoston are taking their cues from all that yuletide weird for their annual Holiday Spectacular, a production that fuses scripted comedy and improv for a holiday-themed show that ain't your grandma's Nutcracker. Though we're sure they'll manage to fit some prime nutcracking jokes in there somewhere. The Holiday Speetacular plays with ho-ho-hos aplenty through Dec. 27. | Alexandra Cavallo

MASTERS OF SEX Sex can be a messy, awkward business under normal circumstances. Add a camera crew and two partners who can't stand each other, and you have the basis of Sex Is Comedy, French filmmaker Catherine Breillat's 2002 semi-autobiographical look at the process of filming a sex scene for the big screen. Already an uncomfortable process, it's compounded by two leads who can't get along and a director who hops into bed with the pair in hopes of fostering more chemistry. Don't forget your nude undies when the film bares all on Dec. 11-12 at the Muscum of Finc Arts. / Elizabeth Isenberg

Beyond the Lights ★★★1/2 Nina Simone's "Blackbird" functions as a theme song in this remarkably affecting romantic drama from Gina Prince-Bythewood (writer/director of Love & Basketball). It's first sung during a prologue by 10-year-old Noni (India Jean-Jacques), who is thrilled to take runner-up in a talent contest. But this isn't good enough for her controlling mother (Minnie Driver), who drags her from the stage, demanding that the now teary-eyed girl chuck her second-place trophy. Years later, the adult Noni (Belle's Gugu Mbatha-Raw in a spell-binding performance) is a Rihanna-like songstress on the verge of bigger things with the release of her first solo album imminent. Having broken through as the sexualized prop of white rapper Kid Culprit (Machine Gun Kelly), she seems to have taken her mother's all-or-nothing ideology to heart—until the cracks show and she attempts a suicide leap from her hotel balcony. Nate Parker plays Kaz, the young cop who saves her life, becoming a major part of it. "Why you wanna fly, Blackbird?" Noni finally wails during an emotional reprise of the song from her youth. "You ain't ever gonna fly." Poised for stardom along with Parker, Mbatha-Raw not only flies—she soars. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Birdman or (The Unexpected Virtue of Ignorance) ★★★ There's a gimmick in this new tour de force from Alejandro González Iñárritu, but it's not what you're thinking. Sure, Michael Keaton is terrifically ironic as Riggan Thomson—aka Birdman, a nod to his time as Batman more than two decades ago—a washed-up actor attempting a "serious" comeback on Broadway by writing, directing and starring in an ill-advised adaptation of Raymond Carver stories. No, it's the single-take illusion that Iñárritu and cinematographer Emmanuel Lubezki employ when it serves little dramatic purpose, especially given the amount of time compression (the movie is set during the course of about a week). Lubezki won an Oscar for the same trick in Alfonso Cuaron's Gravity, and initially it seems to fit the backstage feel, as if we're watching a play within a play—but moving outside the theater, the technique is a scream for attention. That's a shame, given the nice work by Edward Norton as the stage star who tries to overtake Riggan's production, an understated Zach Galifianakis as Riggan's friend and producer, and Emma Stone out-acting everyone as Riggan's assistant. She's also the possibly schizophrenic actor's recovering addict daughter, who falls for her father's nemesis. Yeah, the script's the weakest part. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Dumb and Dumber To ★ America, you get what you deserve. You've just made this awful, virtually laugh-free sequel to a beloved 20-year-old comedy the number-one film at the box office, ensuring we'll be witnessing the further misadventures of Lloyd Christmas (Jim Carrey) and Harry Dunne (Jeff Daniels) by about 2034, as the end credits of Bobby and Peter Farrelly's film threaten. The Rhode Island-based brothers' latest finds them taking their signature dimwit creations on a road trip to locate the child (Rachel Melvin) Harry never knew he had, the product of a one-time union with "titanic whore" Fraida Felcher (very good sport Kathleen Turner). In their 30s, these two were amiable idiots; now in their 50s, they simply seem mentally ill, which is no fun to watch. Carrey has never seemed so desperate as a performer, while Daniels—who's become a terrific actor in the past two decades—plays his role with more pathos than the film deserves. The Farrelly brothers used to be masters of comic timing and well-orchestrated gags, with real affection for their characters. Now, they've seemingly given up, and the joke's on us, the ticket-buying public. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Foxcatcher ★★1/2 In this true-crime drama, Steve Carell is nearly unrecognizable as billionaire John du Pont, outfitted with a prominent prosthetic nose. Channing Tatum also sports a fake proboscis, and cauliflower ears, as 1984 Olympic gold medal-winning wrestler Mark Schultz. The makeup is an unconvincing distraction, a miscalculation by Bennett Miller, the talented director of Capote, who'd resisted burying Philip Seymour Hoffman under latex. It's unfortunate, given the strong work of his leads. Carell is deliberately creepy and off-putting, adopting a lilting monotone that's as vacant as du Pont's eyes. Tatum seethes with silent rage in the shadow of his older, more successful Olympian brother Dave (a bearded Mark Ruffalo), a family man and gym owner who's happy to hear that du Pont is making the underemployed Mark a coach at du Pont's Foxcatcher Farm, a massive estate in suburban Philadelphia. But du Pont eventually becomes disappointed in Mark and offers Dave a coaching position, setting the stage for tragedy. The film is set during the buildup to the 1988 Olympics, but the shooting that's shoehorned into the final 10 minutes didn't actually transpire until 1996, making the supposition of what may have fueled the climactic crime feel as false as the nose on Carell's face. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Fury ★★★ The latest work of nonstop brutality from writer/director David Ayer (End of Watch) begins with a lone figure emerging from the distance on horseback, an homage to the most famous shot in Lawrence of Arabia. David Lean's movie is a major work of art dealing with a complex man conflicted by his loyalties and the blood on his hands, while Ayer's, well, is not. It's macho

porn, anchored by strong ensemble work (Brad Pitt, Shia LaBeouf and Logan Lerman star). It's also a feature-length merging of the unflinching assault on Normandy in Steven Spielberg's Saving Private Ryan with the violent climax of Sam Peckinpah's The Wild Bunch, a film Ayer had planned on remaking. However, between this movie and Sabotage, he's cribbed enough from Peckinpah's masterpiece that a remake would be redundant, much like this film, which stresses—again and again—the old trope that War Is Hell. It's 1945; Pitt's Sgt. Don "Wardaddy" Collier pulls the Nazi officer in the opening scene from his horse, stabbing the German repeatedly through his eye socket, before rejoining his five-man tank crew on their blood-soaked mission with destiny. Those with weak stomachs might want to skip the popcorn. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Homesman ★★★1/2 Described by men who insult her as "bossy" and "plain," Mary Bee Cuddy (a tremendous Hilary Swank) is finally given a compliment when the 31-year-old spinster is told she's "as good a man as any man here." She's better, actually—and she's the only one willing to transport three women (Grace Gummer, Miranda Otto and Sonja Richter) driven mad by brutal 1850s frontier life, delivering them by horse-drawn carriage from the Nebraska territories to a sanitarium in Iowa. As the sun rises over the plains brilliantly photographed by Rodrigo Prieto, the cast list appears, letting us know that along the way we'll encounter John Lithgow, Tim Blake Nelson, James Spader and Meryl Streep, each a standout in their short scenes. Tommy Lee Jones co-wrote the screenplay (adapted from Glendon Swarthout's 1988 novel of the same name) and appears as the title character, a lowlife claim jumper Cuddy enlists to aid her after saving him from a noose. Jones also directs, giving himself free rein to ham it up, even as his elegiac Western shocks and ultimately deepens. One of 2014's best, late surprises. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Horrible Bosses 2 ★1/2 "We're not criminals! We suck at crime!" yells an exasperated Dale (Charlie Day) to his buddies Nick (Jason Bateman) and Kurt (Jason Sudeikis). Based on this sequel to their 2011 hit, Horrible Bosses, you wouldn't think they were very good at comedy, either. Not that the original was all that great, but this new picture isn't even about horrible bosses. Sean Anders, coming off of the execrable Adam Sandler comedy That's My Boy, tepidly takes the directing reins from Seth Gordon, transforming our hapless heroes into idiot inventors in a plot that finds their dreams of becoming their own bosses being destroyed by a father-son team (Oscar winner Christoph Waltz and Star Trek's Chris Pine) who run a gigantic catalog retailing business. Their hopes dashed, they devise a "kidnaping" scheme, while Anders and his team of writers contrive ways of bringing back the first film's Jennifer Aniston, Kevin Spacey and Jamie Foxx. Yes, that's three Academy Award winners in a mildly offensive film that finds Aniston sodomizing Bateman with a strap-on dildo. Buy a ticket, and he might not be the only one feeling screwed. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Hunger Games: Mockingjay - Part 1 ★★ With barely enough material to pad out 45 minutes, let alone more than two hours, this filmed version of about 40 percent of Suzanne Collins' young adult novel is one of the worst cash grabs I've ever seen. Director Francis Lawrence greatly elevated the second installment of this serialized movie series after Gary Ross' languid adaptation of the original, but he can't do much with a film that's all set-up for next year's conclusion. And Oscar winner Jennifer Lawrence continues to impress as the ridiculously named Katniss Everdeen, but she's given little to do but mope in an underground bunker, venturing out only a few times. Once is to shoot a deer—before deciding not to—and then a couple of times it's to shoot...public service announcements, to help rally the rebellion against President Snow (Donald Sutherland) and the Capitol, where a climactic mission is being mounted (much of it off-screen, unfortunately) to rescue one-third of Katniss' love triangle, Peeta Mellark (Josh Hutcherson). The film is dedicated to Philip Seymour Hoffman, who died before completing his role as Plutarch Heavensbee. OK, all of these names are ridiculous. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Interstellar ★★ Christopher Nolan's latest film is set in an unspecified near-future where climate change has taken hold and man's ambition for science and exploration is a mostly forgotten dream. Matthew McConaughey's Cooper was once a Chuck Yeager-like test pilot for the remnants of NASA; now he's a farmer. In fact, everyone seems to be a farmer, fruitlessly trying to coax crops from the endless supply of dirt that keeps raining from the sky—but Nolan isn't content to keep the corn relegated to the fields. McConaughey's a terrific actor, and while a secret mission to save humanity will rocket him to the furthest reaches of another galaxy and even into—cue the Twilight Zone music—a fifth dimension, Nolan has marooned him with a script that contains very Earth-bound bromides about how love is the key...to everything. As an ill-advised subplot develops in the second act, we discover the threat to Cooper and the human race has less to do with the secrets of the universe than with man's nature—which is literally embodied by a character named "Mann," in case you didn't get it. Some space is best left unexplored. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Nightcrawler ★★★ Dan Gilroy sure wishes it was 1976. The well-regarded screenwriter's first time in the director's chair finds him plumbing that year's Network for his less-than-insightful look at the media's lack of ethics. At a horrific crash scene, underemployed thief Louis Bloom (Jake Gyllenhaal) chances upon Joe Loder (Bill Paxton), a veteran "nightcrawler"—a freelance camera man who films accidents, fires and murders and tells our inquisitive antihero that "if it bleeds, it leads," a notion that was already old when Paddy Chayefsky penned Sidney Lumet's classic. Gilroy even hired his wife (actress Rene Russo) to recycle Faye Dunaway's role as a ratings-starved TV news executive, completing the family affair by employing brothers Tony (his producer) and John (his editor) to aid in his slick, derivative production, which is elevated by a wonderfully wormy performance by Gyllenhaal. Having dropped 30 pounds so his eyes pop from his gaunt, haunted face, Gyllenhaal adopts a manner that recalls Robert De Niro's Travis Bickle, another morally bent antihero who originated in '76, in Martin Scorsese's Taxi Driver. True, Gilroy's picture springs from the spare parts of better films, but its dark humor stings timelessly. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

The Theory of Everything ★★★1/2 There's more to Stephen Hawking than the 80-minute look you may have glimpsed during A Brief History of Time, Errol Morris' extraordinary 1991 nonfiction film about the life and work of the renowned theoretical physicist. Here, director James Marsh views Hawking from the perspective of his first wife, Jane, adapting her memoir into a touching biography. As Jane, Felicity Jones displays tremendous chemistry with the superb Eddie Redmayne, who does almost as much with limited mobility as Daniel Day-Lewis in his Oscar-winning turn in My Left Foot. When we first see him as a 21-year-old Cambridge student, Redmayne's Hawking shows subtle hints of his not-yet-diagnosed motor neuron disease, but when his legs eventually buckle beneath him, his head hitting the pavement with a sickening crack, the only one to disregard his doctor's assertion that he has two years to live is Jane, then a medieval studies major and a devout member of the Church of England. Stephen lacks faith in "celestial dictators," but the two navigate their different belief systems together for a quarter of a century—a love story that defines them and defies time more than just briefly. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Whiplash ★★★1/2 Even before the film's title comes into focus on the black screen, a quickening beat from a snare drum compels your attention, building with military precision until it ends with an echo, as if a muted gunshot has gone off. But there are no weapons deployed in writer/director Damien Chazelle's picture—only psychological warfare, focused on Andrew Neyman (Miles Teller), a 19-year-old drum prodigy in his first semester under Terence Fletcher, top conductor at Manhattan's Shaffer Conservatory, a fictionalized version of Juilliard. Menacingly portrayed by J.K. Simmons, Fletcher is seductive and terrifying, making Vern Schillinger, the Detroit native's character on HBO's Oz, look like Mr. Holland. Neyman pushes himself so hard for his taskmaster that his hands become raw and bloodied; Chazelle's drama nearly doubles as a horror film, with Neyman a man driven to kill, his drum set the victim. Like a great jazz riff, Whiplash becomes a series of variations on a theme, as the student fails to live up to his—or his teacher's—standards. And like many a great jazz song, the movie is sometimes unwieldy, but it builds to a hugely satisfying, electrifying finish. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Wild ★★★ Director Jean-Marc Vallée follows up last year's Dallas Buyers Club with this chronicle of a lost soul's 1,100-mile trek toward redemption and renewal, adapted from Cheryl Strayed's memoir by novelist Nick Hornby, who makes her journey as internal as it is outdoorsy. Reese Witherspoon plays Strayed as a woman in way over her head as she sets off alone on the Pacific Crest Trail with way too much gear, little of it practical. When first we see her, Strayed's well into her hike, tearing off a toenail bloodied from boots that are too small. But the real suffering came before. We flash back through various episodes of her life, from dealing with an abusive father in her troubled childhood (where she's played by Bobbi Strayed Lindstrom, the real Strayed's daughter) to the better upbringing she escaped to with her mother, Bobbi (a terrific Laura Dern), before things became worse again. This isn't the America's Sweetheart persona you expect from Witherspoon. Whoring herself out for heroin in flashback and frantically licking dew off of her tent to survive in the wild, she gives one of her most stripped-down performances to date, in every sense. (At Kendall Square.)

MUSIC

FIRST, BASS

Nantucket native and Berklee College of Music grad Meghan Trainor is best known for her booty-celebrating single "All About That Bass," but there's also plenty in front of the 20-year-old, who's riding high off the success of her major label debut, Title, an EP packed with infectious doo-wop-influenced jams. Lest you think she's a bubble-gum flash in the pan, however, know this: Trainor wrote her first lyrics at 11, taught herself to digitally produce music at 13 and self-released three country albums before topping the charts with her bass-heavy hit. Shake it with Trainor and the rest of the Jingle Ball lineup on Dec. 14 at TD Garden. / Katie Smith

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

BE STILL MY ART Ready to shelve the shelfie? Had your fill of artfully arranged lattes and macarons? Those in need of a change of scenery can trade the twee Instagram tableaus for a more refined artistic tradition at ACME Fine Art's Still Life Invitational. Gallery director David Cowan sets the scene with 20th- and 21st-century paintings by George Lloyd, Mike Wright, Richard Baker and other artists, including this 1960 cubist-inspired work, Still Life with Fruit by Kenneth Stubbs, who honed his skills at Provincetown's Webster School of Art. The Still Life Invitational will be sitting still through Jan. 3 / Sarah Hagman

BOOKS & POETRY

Edited by Meghan Kavanaugh

DOWN TO A SCIENCE

It's been more than 20 years since Bill Nye the Science Guy first hit the middle-school circuit, teaching kids about buoyancy, magnetism and the importance of a good theme song. But the educator, engineer, comedian and all-around smart guy was back on screen last February when he squared off with creationist Ken Ham before a hostile Kentucky crowd and millions of online viewers. In his new book, Undeniable: Evolution and the Science of Creation, the bow-tied professor takes the debate further, blending the silly and the serious to discuss the importance of evolution. Take a field trip to the Wilbur Theatre to get schooled on Dec. 18. / Grace Rasmus

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of t he three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

SHOULD'VE WORN DEPENDS

The Cam Neely Foundation for Cancer Care never fails to amp up the celebrity wattage in Boston with Comics Come Home, the annual all-star comedy benefit. For its 20th anniversary installment (of which The Improper was a sponsor), they hauled out the big guns at the TD Garden.

A star-studded pre-party took place at the Legends Club, and in addition to Bruins players past and present, it attracted the likes of actor Michael J. Fox, Tonight Show host Jimmy Fallon, occupational a-hole Denis Leary, Aerosmith's Tom Hamilton, chef-to-the-stars Ming Tsai, rock-star clothier Alan Bilzerian and a clown car's worth of top comedians, who put on a show that made everyone's face hurt and was undoubtedly the hardest ab workout I'll have this year.

The evening's snarkiest remark: Upon seeing comedian Lenny Clarke wearing turquoise pants and a paisley shirt, one guest said, "He looks like the love child of a Newbury Street hairstylist and Steven Tyler."

PAS DE PIGSKIN

There's no activity more quintessentially autumnal than tailgating, and when you do it under a tent on the waterfront, with the city's top chefs offering their takes on classic munchies, you've got yourself a get-together that makes packing on some winter weight worth it.

Held at Sam's at Louis, The Ultimate Tailgate Party benefited Lovin' Spoonfuls, raising money to bring surplus restaurant food to homeless shelters, soup kitchens and food pantries. Hosts Esti and Drew Parsons greeted guests, including honorees and restaurateurs extraordinaire Joanne Chang and Christopher Myers, cheesemongers Brad and Brian Wasik, creative force of nature Izzy Berdan, Herald scenester Erica Corsano, blue-blooded hash-slinger George Lewis and the delectable Claudine, Ritz mixologist Mario Arredondo, the aptly named Gina Fox, foxy news anchor Lisa Hughes and her other half, Mike Casey, and so on and so forth, who sipped, supped and whooped it up as if the next morning wasn't Monday (which, unfortunately, it was).

The only thing missing was an actual football game, which didn't seem to matter, especially to the woman whose husband said, "She wouldn't know the NFL from the NAACP."

HAVEN'T WE ALL

The W Boston was awash in orange for Youth Design's second annual Carnival fundraiser, which attracted an artsy crowd to raise money to provide underserved kids with paid internships in the design field.

Among the architects, decorators, fashionisti and fabulous types were the evening's honoree, Boston Fashion Week founder Jay Calderin, co-hosts Alina Wolhardt, Jay Gordon, Michael Kelley and Ricardo Rodriguez, the super-stylish Liana and Michael Krupp with their month-old addition, Frankie, music man Steve Oristaglio, real estate mack daddy Rob Caro, catering moguls Neal Balkowitsch and Dan Mathieu, tall drink of water Jim Hornor with hot mom Sumai Koundakjian, and one woman who said, "This is a design crowd. Who in God's name thought up-lighting was a good idea?"

While a club-worthy DJ spun ambient music and delicious apps were passed, the attentive bartenders helped fuel the action on a faux midway, featuring games with prizes ranging from purple high-tops to designer bathing suits. The evening's funniest remark came from the man who bought tickets for a game called "Tip a Troll" and said, "I should be good at this. I've banged plenty of them."

BUT WHO'S COUNTING?

If you're going to have a Fete of Food and Wine, it might as well be at the Four Seasons, which is where the Crohn's and Colitis Foundation held its swanky annual shindig.

On hand were such mensches and machers as the whole Cutler clan with patriarch Teddy (sipping Macallan 18), gazillionaire Arthur Winn (in search of tequila), co-chairs Judi Karas and Judi Walk, the latter's music mogul son, Charlie, the stunning Sabra Katz, flawless brunette Susan Shale with the debonair Rob, Man of the Year David Howe, Humanitarian of the Year Corey Siegel, sexy chazan Jodi Blankstein and her lovable other half, Jim, and one guest who said, "This is a fun crowd for playing Six Degrees of Hebrew School."

The evening's funniest exchange: A man said, "I haven't seen you in ages!" to which a woman replied, "It was at least two facelifts ago." ◆

RENT WAS A GATEWAY DRUG TO theater for me, first taken in as a rapt 12-year-old at the Shubert Theatre (and then re-experienced an embarrassing number of times via the cast recording). So as I sit down to write this last letter of 2014, a question comes quickly: How do you measure a year? For me, the math has been pretty easy. I started my first official day as editor on Jan. 1 of this year, so rather than adding up midnights and cups of coffee, I've been counting the incredibly talented and kind colleagues around me and, of course, a nice round number: 25 issues, the last but not least of which you hold in your hands.

But instead of looking back, our New Year's issue mostly looks to what's ahead. For our cover story, Matt Martinelli mulls the future of soccer in Boston, plumbing plans to bring a stadium to the area and profiling star player Jermaine Jones, who showed his skill both at the World Cup and on the New England Revolution this year. Meanwhile, Alexandra Cavallo plays a different field, resolving to take a fresh approach to dating by testing out a host of new apps and services. Jonathan Soroff interviews locally bred explorer Josh Gates on his travel show, premiering in January. Carley D. Thornell offers a sneak peek at the soon-to-open Boston Harbor Distillery, brainchild of Boston Beer Company co-founder Rhonda Kallman. And Sarah Hagman taps a bevy of other local notables with big plans for the new year. I hope yours gets off to a very happy start.

PAVLOK'S ELECTRIC POTENTIAL »»

SHOCK VALUE

APP ZAP: The iPhone app will help keep users on track.

Resolve a la Pavlov

Come Jan. 2, gyms will be filled with newbs looking to shed holiday pounds, countless smokers will slap on the patch and would-be self-improvers of all stripes will blithely commit to positive change. But making a resolution is far easier than keeping it, which is why Weight Watchers, the patch and all manner of apps and devices designed to keep you on track exist.

The Behavioral Technology Group aims to bring something different to the already crowded table. Helmed by former Stanford student Maneesh Sethi, the startup began in Boston in 2013 with seed funding from local hardware incubator Bolt and, this fall, began crowdfunding for its flagship gadget: Pavlok, a wristband that will shock wearers if they fail to meet their goals. "We focus on breaking bad habits and giving people the necessary tools to do so," says Chris Schelzi, director of strategy and marketing. "We are the first company to use aversion therapy in a consumer product for this purpose." Needless to say, the concept hit a nerve, and the $50,000 Indiegogo campaign ultimately drew $254,133 in funding.

The wristbands are available for pre-order for May delivery, but prototypes for Indiegogo supporters start shipping in January. I got my hands on one to give it a try. Strapping on much like a Fitbit, the Pavlok is simple, stylishly utilitarian and similarly easy to use. I settled on a fairly straightforward vice to vanquish: biting my nails. For three straight days, whenever I found my fingertips creeping toward my mouth, I'd gingerly press the yellow lighting bolt, delivering a not-so-gentle jolt of electricity straight to my wrist. It wasn't pleasant. That was the point. After only a few days I already found myself anticipating that nasty little shock (users can adjust the voltage level to suit their own tolerance) and associating guilty nibbling with an unwelcome "slap" on the wrist.

But keeping yourself accountable can be tough. So users will be able to partner with other Pavlok wearers through an iPhone app, which offers a program of incentives and punishments. "It's a lot easier to break a promise we make to ourselves than it is to break a commitment we made to someone else," Schelzi explains. "When there is another person that won't put up with your excuses, your commitments become much more meaningful." For instance, if you're trying to get in shape, you might enter a weekly goal of running 10 miles into the app, which will send alerts to your phone and physical reminders, in the form of vibrations, to your wristband. If you ignore them and fail to meet your goal, your Pavlok partner will get a heads up—and can zap you remotely. But don't worry: They won't be able to shock you indiscriminately. "We are still building out that functionality, but we certainly aren't going to let people 'zap' you unnecessarily," Schelzi says, adding, "unless that is something you're into..." / Alexandra Cavallo

CHILL AND GRACE: Treat yourself to Gracie's ice cream.

Good Eats: In Good Gracie's

It's fitting that this Somerville ice cream parlor features hometown favorite Marshmallow Fluff on the menu. At Gracie's, which recently opened in the former Sherman Market space, you can enjoy the local marshmallow goo in the popular chocolate-Fluff ice cream or, better yet, spooned into a sugar cone and lightly torched for a "Fluff cone." Top it with scoops of cold-brew coffee ice cream: a clean white but surprisingly full-flavored novelty, the result of steeping the coffee beans in the dairy. For the ultimate effect, finish it off with a ladle of housemade hot fudge. / Elizabeth Bomze

HOMER HAVEN

A NEW ASSEMBLY ROW EATERY HONORS LATE SOX STAR TONY C.

Tony C's
699 Assembly Row, Somerville (617-996-1520)

IT'S BEEN 50 YEARS SINCE A TEENAGE TONY Conigliaro made his auspicious debut for his hometown Red Sox. But after a few years as a prodigious power hitter, he was struck in the eye with a baseball that forever altered his career and his life, which ended in 1990. Conigliaro's tragic story is remembered by almost everyone who lived in the region in 1967, but his family doesn't want him to be forgotten as generations pass. And so—in addition to continuing their efforts to have his number retired at Fenway Park—they're lending his name to the Cronin Group's newest restaurant, Tony C's Bar & Grill, which is expected to open in Somerville's Assembly Row in late December.

Conigliaro's number, 25, will be lit up in a massive light fixture, his niece will be working as a bartender, and his memorabilia will appear throughout the restaurant. But sports fans will also have plenty of TVs to look at, with nearly 100 in total. Above the 50-seat bar will be a Jumbotron with approximately 50 55-inch flat-screens that can be configured in any number of combinations, much like the big-screen matrix used at Jerry Remy's Seaport, another restaurant from the Cronin Group. But with indoor seating for 386, as well as outdoor seating in warmer months, the Tony C's team hopes to use its location in the bustling Assembly Row to attract more than just sports enthusiasts.

"With Legoland right there, we're welcoming families. And we have a great kids' menu. The movie theater will give guests the opportunity to have date night, a wonderful bottle of wine with an entree before watching a movie. And with big retail stores in Assembly Row, people can grab a bite and a glass of wine when shopping," says general manager Bonnie Fleischer.

One of the main draws will be the scratch kitchen focused on American comfort food under the direction of Giovani Suarez (Grill 23). Two of the signature dishes are named after Conigliaro: the No. 25 burger, topped with crispy pork belly, a fried egg, cheese and barbecue sauce, and the Chicken Conigliaro, pan-seared chicken with angel hair pasta, topped with lemon white wine sauce and capers. The bar will offer 40 beers on draft, 40 different wines, 10 signature cocktails and a full liquor program.

The other draw is the view of the Mystic River. (Think about reading that sentence even five years ago!) The outdoor seating wraps around the entire building, and glass walls with sliding windows and doors will allow customers to get a glimpse of the water from the inside as well.

"We definitely think it can draw all different types of people," Fleischer says. "Not just sports fans."

MAKE WAY FOR MOODY'S

MORE ELBOW ROOM: Joshua Smith plans to expand the popular Waltham spot.

IT HASN'T TAKEN LONG FOR Moody's Delicatessen & Provisions in Waltham to attract an enthusiastic following, drawn to charcuterie-focused delights such as a signature banh mi starring 48-hour sous vide pork belly. Now, chef/owner Joshua Smith is gutting the space next door to the deli—formerly a chicken wings joint—to create what he calls "a fun, little wine-focused thing." By "thing," Smith means an extension of Moody's that will showcase the fruit of the vine and "obviously, a really extensive charcuterie list."

"We really designed the crap out of this," Smith says enthusiastically, describing walls of reclaimed limestone, a "beautiful poured concrete bar" with a "custom charcuterie island," handmade copper soffits and a "big, beautiful, custom-made wood-fired oven." When the eatery opens, probably in March, it will have 50 seats (plus another 16 at the bar) and a menu featuring "all the great products in our arsenal," according to Smith. "We have a great array of fermented vegetables, and we're just now getting into dairy," he says, alluding to their yogurt and cheese. Expect lots of shareable plates and a daily rotisserie special. As for the wine, Smith promises "really exclusive bottles" by the glass. "Affordable, interesting, unique wine is the focus," he says, but the restaurant will also have a full liquor license. "I have an affinity for bourbon, so we'll have a great bourbon selection." There will also be a handful of beers available. Closing time will be relatively early: 10 pm—because "nothing ever happens after 10 pm in Metro West," Smith quips—but that could change. "I'm very flexible," Smith points out. "I worked at the Four Seasons for 10 years [in Seattle and in Boston], so the answer's always 'yes.' The guests speak, and we listen."

ROCKING A NEW CHEF

KEENAN LANGLOIS, FORMERLY OF THE Union Bar & Grille, is now the executive chef at The Sinclair. His winter menu includes dishes such as Yankee pot roast with braised short rib and Parisienne potatoes, and squash fritters with black truffle mayo, thyme and toasted chili oil.

BETTER LATE

'Tis the season for "LBV," or late-bottled vintage, which is a port category created to offer a vintage-like experience—a dark ruby color, strong tannins and black fruit flavors—without long aging requirements or the bother of having to decant the wine from its sediment. LBVs have a two-week shelf life, make ideal mates for any kind of chocolate and warm the spirit on those dreary sunless days that we have to endure once every few years. These three "desserts in a glass" are the winners of my recent blind taste test. / Sandy Block

TAYLOR FLADGATE LATE BOTTLED VINTAGE PORT, 2009 As the first producer of LBV (originally known as "vintage reserve"), Taylor remains not only the national category leader but the worldwide one. Its usual style is earthy and tobacco-like, with rich fruit and grippy tannins. This superb 2009 selection features an aromatic profile of chocolate mocha, with a velvety, raisin-like sweetness on the palate. $23, The Wine & Cheese Cask, Somerville

QUINTA DO NOVAL UNFILTERED SINGLE VINEYARD LATE BOTTLED VINTAGE PORT, 2008 This legendary estate is one of Douro Valley's most renowned single vineyards, and it has produced an irresistible wine with dark cocoa aromas, intensely jammy fruit and prominent tangy acids. Although most LBVs don't age, this is an unfiltered wine, which allows it to improve in the bottle and mellow in a few years. $26, Marty's, Newton

QUINTA DO CRASTO UNFILTERED LATE BOTTLED VINTAGE PORT, 2008 Another unfiltered Quinta bottling, this wine is super-ripe, with a profusion of juicy red and black cherries. Quite sweet, almost candied, and mellow on the palate, it's got a slightly clove-like spice accent to balance the dark fruit flavors. $25, DeLuca's Market, Boston

FRESH STARTS

A new year holds so much promise. You set out with the best of intentions, only to abandon kale, the expensive gym membership and daily phone calls to your mom shortly thereafter. Next time, you say. Well, it's about that time—perhaps you need a bit of inspiration. These local movers and shakers have running starts planned for 2015, with new jobs, new projects and new goals. Here, they count down their professional and personal aspirations for the coming 365 days. / Soroh Hogmon

The Central Library is set to unveil the first part of the Johnson building renovation in March, with revamped children and teen areas, plus a new workspace and reading area for adults. "I hope every person...finds something exciting and relevant that brings them back again and again," says Michael Colford, director of library services. As for a personal resolution, Colford is aiming for something most New Englanders can get behind: "I'd like to spend more time in warmer climates."

After 10 years at Providence's Farmstead, chef Matt Jennings is bringing his award-winning food back to Boston. In 2015, Jennings hopes to continue spending time with his family, keep up with boxing and, perhaps more importantly to some eager diners, "to get this damn restaurant open!" Townsman is slated to open later this winter on the ground floor of Radian, where you'll be able to dig into dishes like Vermont quail schnitzel.

Jo Frances Meyer's new post as executive director of the Boston Landmarks Orchestra combines her two passions: music and community outreach. The current director of development at Rockport Music switches gears in the beginning of January, hoping "to help the orchestra reach, in a meaningful way, more residents of Boston, both children and adults, through its concerts and education programs than ever before."

Eva Respini's first order of business after finishing her 15-year run at the Museum of Modern Art in March? Finding a place to live here. "After that," says the ICA's recently appointed Barbara Lee chief curator, "it's to get to know individuals across the arts community in Boston, from artists to curators at sister institutions to professors at the area art schools."

The movie adaptation of Dick Lehr's Black Mass hits theaters in September. (You may recall Johnny Depp wandering around town, sporting a receding hairline as mobster Whitey Bulger.) This year, the Boston University professor and former Globe reporter plans to finish his first young-adult novel and run a half marathon. "And, while recovering, read the books stacked on my desk and night table," he adds. The lineup: Stewart O'Nan's West of Sunset, Elizabeth Strout's Olive Kitteridge and Ron Rash's Something Rich and Strange.

The Edward M. Kennedy Institute opens its doors in March, aiming to educate the public about U.S. government with a replica Senate chamber, exhibit halls, seminars and training for incoming officials. Fittingly, institute president Jean MacCormack says she'd like to help more young people get engaged in public service. She adds, "As a Dorchester girl who spent many years living in Dartmouth"—including 13 years as chancellor at UMass—"this year I resolve to get out more and renew my personal and social contacts here in Boston."

A CHANGE OF TUNE

Right after wrapping production on Aquarius—on NBC series premiering in 2015—David Duchovny turned to a very different project: finishing his debut album. Produced by local indie label ThinkSoy Records and recorded at Somerville's Q Division Studios, it features a backing band of Berklee grads, and Duchovny hit the school to speak with students during his December stay in town. But first, he riffed with us a bit in the studio. / Jacqueline Houton

WHAT BROUGHT YOU TO MUSIC? I was on a path where I was working four months out of the year, which gave me a lot of time off. I was with my kids in the city, so I had a lot of time until 3 o'clock, and I'd always wanted to play guitar. I started teaching myself, you know, looking up chords on the Internet for songs that I like, and started playing them. And then I realized, oh hey, these songs are not reinventing anything. It's rock and roll. So I thought, you know, why can't I do that? And lyrically I knew that I could hang because I've always written. I've written a lot of poetry and I'm sort of a mediocre poet, but I think mediocre poets make good lyricists.

SO WHO ARE YOUR MUSICAL INFLUENCES? R.E.M. and Wilco, and maybe Tom Petty if I'm lucky and Lou Reed. These are great, great things. I don't want to say that they're influences or anything like that, but that's some stuff that I like.

ANY RECURRING THEMES ON THE ALBUM? The material's very personal. But because it's personal it's universal. It's always the more personal something is, the more universal it has a chance to be.... We range from kind of ballads to rocking out a little bit. Three or four songs, we're rockin'.

YOU ALSO HAVE A BOOK, HOLY COW, HITTING SHELVES IN FEBRUARY. It's kind of a book I hope parents could read with their children, because there's some stuff that kids aren't going to get, but it's a fable, it's an allegory. It's about a cow, a pig and a turkey.

AND WHAT ABOUT AQUARIUS? I play a homicide detective who's tangentially involved with Charles Manson before the murders. So it's an interesting show about America at a turning point.... We may be at one right now, too, so it's kind of timely.

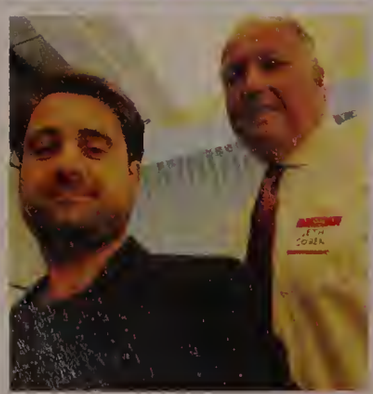
What's in a Name?



Seth Cohen is on a mission to meet every other Seth Cohen in the world. No, not that Seth Cohen, though yes, he gets that a lot. "A couple times a month, I'm asked, 'Have you ever heard of that show The OC?' Well, of course I have," Cohen says. "I can't escape it!" But a new Seth Cohen might come to the top of your Google search results, thanks to the Seth Cohen Project, which has the Bedford-bred Cohen traversing the country and soon, he says, the globe. Cohen started the project a couple of months ago, on a bit of a whim. "I was at a place in my life where I wasn't sure 'what's next,' and I had always wanted to go on some great adventure—chasing windmills or hunting unicorns," he says. "So this search for my namesakes seemed as good as an excuse as any to venture out into the world, find some adventure and perhaps find myself in the process." And he's already had adventures aplenty. From a competitive bridge player to a high school dropout turned body builder turned WWF wrestler turned law school grad, all the Seth Cohens he's met have led incredibly interesting, rich lives, Cohen says. KILLER COMMUTERS

DEAR PRIUS DRIVER WHO CUT ACROSS TWO LANES TO SIDESWIPE ME ON MY BICYCLE AT BERKELEY AND WASHINGTON THIS RAINY MORNING: I get it—your windows were wet, maybe even fogged up from the rain and your lack of knowledge of how to use a defroster. I don't care. Luckily, I'm a pretty good bike handler and I can skid to a sideways stop as I slam into your car. However, next time I might be one of the other thousands of cyclists in Boston trying to safely get to work, and you could kill someone. I wait at red lights. I stop at stop signs. I use lights at night. I don't bike on sidewalks. I pay taxes and vehicle registration for the car I choose not to drive to work. I wear a helmet (not that that should matter). Please do your part to not kill anyone in your 1.5-ton gas-guzzling hybrid. Cyclists have a right to the roads in Boston, and I have a right to make it home safe to my wife every night.

TO THE ATTRACTIVE BLONDE IN STARBUCKS ON NEWBURY STREET ON THANKSGIVING WEEKEND: You commented to me that the barista was not nearly as excited about my caffe mocha as was he was about the previous patron's Nicaragua selection. I acknowledged this and then mindlessly went on my way with my mocha. Five to 10 minutes later, I realized that I made a huge mistake in not seeking to extend our conversation. If you are not hopelessly attached to someone else at this time and would like to further our discussion on Starbucks offerings, or perhaps even switch to a discussion on wines, I would love to see you again!

— Star(bucks) struck

TO THE BRUNETTE IN THE NEW MODEL BLACK JEEP CHEROKEE CRUISING 45 MPH DOWN COLUMBIA ROAD: Wow, we are two lucky chicks! You because despite speeding down a residential street—between L Street and Ticknor in Southie at 7:45 this morning—without looking up from your phone, you managed to narrowly avoid killing your neighbor in front of her 5-year-old kid, thus sparing yourself a huge inconvenience (as well as a lifetime of heart-wrenching guilt). Me because I'm still alive.

TROOPS WITH TRUNKS

A LOCAL WRITER DELIVERS AN ACTION-PACKED BIOGRAPHY OF "ELEPHANT BILL."

Elephant Company* by Vicki Constantine Croke
Published by Random House, 343 pages, $28

IMAGINE TRYING TO TRAIN 100 DOGS; NOW picture working with that many elephants. That is what Billy Williams did in colonial Burma in 1920, teaching elephants to lend their strength to logging labors in the jungle. Alongside deft native elephant trainers ("uzis"), Williams worked with a disciplined animal crew who, after hours, reverted to their jungle wildness. Croke thrillingly describes the adventures and dangers, the exhausting treks, the encounters with leeches, a 17-foot snake, malaria and monsoons.

We also see how Williams was attuned to the sensitivity of his trunked brethren, with their acute sense of smell and equally sharp ability to feel affection and heartbreak. He developed an especially strong bond with one magisterial elephant, Bandoola, sharing a "meeting of souls." So it seems only fair, given his tenderness toward animals, that even in this remote jungle he managed to fall in love with a woman named Susan, marry and have wilderness-ready children.

But a new danger arose in 1942, when the Japanese invaded Burma, requiring a massive exodus. The elephants' might helped build bridges so people could escape, and in turn, the men carved a "stairway" up a steep cliff, allowing the elephants to delicately tiptoe their thousands of pounds up to safety. It's a dramatic example of the teamwork, between animals and with humans, that impresses throughout Croke's tale.

FROM PAGE 216: Williams saw the elephant—no rider, no pack—racing toward him. He tried to stop her by brandishing a walking stick fitted with a spear-head. It did not sway her. He had to leap out of her way as she barreled past him.... Amazingly, he saw her clear the ravine in a motion that science has said is nearly impossible—she appeared to jump it. ◆

ALOHA ADVENTURE

THRILL SEEKERS AND BEACH BUMS ALIKE FIND PARADISE IN OAHU.

TIKI BAR TIPPLING HAS LONG BEEN A staple of classic honeymoon escapes (bonus Instagram likes if it's a swim-up). But when couples are looking for more adventure than a race to the bottom of their frozen margs, a beach vacay can be a bit of a snooze. To really get the heart pumping, head to island of Oahu, where you can test a relationship with the ultimate leap of faith—a jump right off the side of a mountain. Because as it turns out, speeding side by side and upside-down along a zip line cable hundreds of feet in the air is the perfect time to appreciate your S.O., take in the view of Hawaii's lush landscape and hope the harness and carabiner rings have also vowed to have and to hold.

This adrenaline-aphrodisiac cocktail is served up at CLIMB Works, a seven-dual-line zip lining course on Oahu's North Shore that includes a 1,500-foot run. (And there's a 2,500-footer, more than eight football fields long, in the works for early 2015.) Guests soar through the trees and over acres of organic farmland used to grow basil that's shipped back to the mainland, as well as tasty apple bananas that unfortunately stay put.

But that's not the only adventure found on the island, which ranks as Hawaii's third largest in size but number one in population. Oahu's nearly 1 million residents make up 70 percent of the state's total, so the capital of Honolulu has as much metropolitan area as it does paradisiacal scenery. Nowhere is this contrasting landscape as clear as from a seat aboard a Blue Hawaiian Helicopters tour, which covers most of the island, showcasing Pearl Harbor, Sacred Falls, Dole pineapple farms and Diamond Head, a mountain that provides hikers with some of the best views of Oahu available without going airborne.

Back in the city, where hibiscus-flowered shirts are as out of place as they would be in Back Bay, the contemporary Hawaii finds its beacon in the Modern Honolulu, a 353-room boutique hotel whose sleek design is punctuated by pops of colorful decor—a piece by Herbie Fletcher featuring surfboards broken during competition hangs in the lobby, and the artist's multi-photo chronicle of surf star Kelly Slater drinking a beer while riding a wave is on view in the penthouse suite. For a drink of your own, head behind the lobby's speakeasy-esque swiveling bookcase to the Study for a cocktail named after a classic novel. Continue relaxing at the Spa at the Modern Honolulu, where the Hawaiian Lomi Lomi massage uses techniques meant to mimic the ocean waves you'll be surfing soon enough.

Next door, the Hilton Hawaiian Village provides the entertainment, from its weekly fireworks display

For a different set of characters, head to Aulani, a Disney resort that's light on the shtick, for visits with Mickey and Minnie. Couples can sneak away from family time on the lazy river for cocktails in the ʻŌlelo Room, named for the Hawaiian word for "word." The wood-carved decor offers a primer on basic vocab, and fluent bartenders can help you with pronunciation, reflecting the recent renaissance of the language. Just down the road, raise a glass and say cheers—or "kāmau"—to a similar resurgence in Hawaii's local food scene with chef Peter Merriman at the helm. Ninety-five percent of the ingredients at Monkeypod Kitchen, his restaurant at the Ko Olina resort, are locally produced, and the menu features fare like organic macadamia nut-crusted day-caught mahi mahi and a Makawao Ave. cocktail made with Templeton rye, lemon, honey, bitters and cayenne-ginger beer that's created in-house daily.

For dessert (and a mid-morning snack, and après-swim nosh), head to the Kahala Hotel and Resort for its milk and dark chocolate-covered macadamia nuts, made fresh daily and paired perfectly with a wall of orchids that omit a faint smell of chocolate. But the beachside resort is more than just a cocoa lover's dream. Nestled in a quiet Honolulu neighborhood, the hotel's ocean-facing rooms have unobstructed views of the sunrise, as well as the property's 26,000-square-foot lagoon, home to six resident dolphins. Book a swim with them or head to the ocean to rent a stand-up paddleboard.

Of course, with a beach spanning the length of the estate, guests can forgo the water sports for a much-deserved afternoon off with a fruity drink from the poolside bar—perfect for days when navigating the buffet is all the adventure you need. ◆

MODERN LOVE

CAFE ARTSCIENCE OFFERS A FRISSON OF FUTURISM.

CAFE ARTSCIENCE
650 East Kendall St., Cambridge (857-999-2193)
cafeartscience.com

Cafe ArtScience, a new restaurant situated amidst a cluster of gleaming new office buildings near Kendall Square, wears its intellect on its sleeve. Not just a restaurant, it's also a bar, art gallery, auditorium and "concept shop": the brainchild of Harvard science professor David Edwards, whose novel innovations include the WikiPearl, an edible, washable "skin" for serving ice-cream-like foods. The room features a chilly, retro-futurist design that recalls the space-station interiors in Stanley Kubrick's 2001: A Space Odyssey. Its bar is run by Todd Maul, whose use of chem-lab gadgets like a rotational evaporator to produce original cocktails won him a rabid following in his prior gig at Clio. Against this backdrop, one might expect chef Patrick Campbell (ex-No. 9 Park) to regale us with foams and spherified foods a la Ferran Adrià, or perhaps Grant Achatz's pillows of nutmeg air—modernist cuisine for brainiacs and food nerds.

Certainly the bar menu's WikiPearl ($8) offers some sci-fi weirdness, recalling an oversized yellow grape both in appearance and in the texture of its artificial rind, flanked by aerated brioche and filled with savory foie gras ice cream. Like most dishes here, its accompaniments are artfully arranged with tweezer-assisted precision—you will be forgiven for wanting to take pictures—but the expected intensity of fatty liver is regrettably muted. Less visually impressive, Cherriette radishes ($9) register more forcefully with an inside-out variation on French breakfast radishes, filled with herb-flavored butter and salt, mildly goosed with a sprinkling of caviar. Marinated raw oysters ($3.75 each) are precisely dotted with a teensy dice of apple, one miniscule cube of truffle and a perilla leaf: pristine and unimpeachable. Beef carpaccio ($21) arranges microtome-thin slices of meltingly tender raw beef in a pinwheel adorned with chunks of lobster, matchsticks of black truffle and stiff blobs of XO sauce-flavored foam to lovely, delicate effect.

Warm sunchokes ($12) are likewise picture-pretty, a helix of grilled disks of sunchoke and leaves of flower sprouts, greens and oddly delicious curls of translucent-yellow cured egg yolk. The beauty of an artichoke soup ($16) is less in its presentation than its butterfat-rich, velouté-like smoothness and the spiky salt accent of a plump white-anchovy fillet. Tortellini ($18) have an exquisite delicacy in their wonton-like pasta wrappers and filling of house-made ricotta and braised greens, but one wishes for a meatier, more substantial underpinning than the wan Parmesan consommé in which they float.

Vegetable "marrow" ($17) is a witty idea—and a sign the chef respects his vegetarian customers—braising the stiff stalks on which Brussels sprouts grow and halving them lengthwise so their flesh can be scooped out like marrow from a beef bone. It's sauced and given velvety protein heft with an egg yolk emulsion, then topped with big, wafer-thin potato chips in another food-magazine-worthy presentation. Carnivores may gravitate toward beef cheek ($19), a gnarly, underused off-cut that delivers superbly rich flavor without appearing too fatty. Some Noma-like bedecking with twiggy-looking greens, a foundation of big slices of fried cauliflower and punchy cubes of pickled butternut squash complete an otherworldly-looking dish in an eating-contest portion. Lamb duet ($29) features two nicely contrasting cuts: lean loin and gamy belly, again arrayed with painterly precision over pistachio pesto, speckled leaves of chicory and wonderfully chewy, nutty farro couscous.

Desserts keep up the arty, photogenic standards of many entrees, as in a cherrywood Old Fashioned ($13), which cleverly deconstructs the flavors of the classic cocktail via Maraschino-flavored financier cake, bourbon-flavored gelee, burnt-orange meringue and Angostura lace. Gâteau d'anniversaire ($13), a snowball of sweet-corn olive-oil cake enrobed in chocolate, is elegantly paired with an ovoid of cashew ice cream and dollops of fruity sabayon.

At the long bar, one can engage Mr. Maul or any of his well-trained lieutenants in an earnest discussion of how fractional distillation highlights specific elements of certain cordials. Or you could just sample a few of them, marveling at the rich nuance added by the smoked cocoa nibs that infuse the sweet vermouth in the house's signature Negroni ($12), or the crystalline purity of a gimlet ($12) made with clarified lime juice. The French-leaning, 56-deep wine list runs a little dear (with about half in the $90-$210 range), but features more than a dozen under-$50 bargains, plus 17 by-the-glass options (mostly $9-$14.)

Service in the dining room is somewhat self-serious, literate on the complexities of the menu and a bit more polished than is typical for Cambridge, as perhaps should be expected at these prices. The overlit, white-on-white decor is somewhat softened by plushly upholstered green chairs and banquettes. (But don't let them seat your party at a banquette end: The accompanying dime-sized tables are too small for comfort.) In the end, Cafe ArtScience seems more a place to talk about futuristic ideas than to see them embodied on the plate. It's like an MIT geek's rendering of No. 9 Park: beautifully plated food drawing mostly on well-executed but conventional French and Italian technique, served in a less-than-gorgeous room bolstered by an extraordinary cocktail program, drawing the kind of well-heeled older patrons and expense-account types who can bear its steep tariff. It may not be rocket science—more like finely wrought, aesthetically driven artisanry—but it is very, very good. ◆

Q: I EXERCISE (WELL, KIND OF) BUT I STILL HAVE A TUMMY PAUNCH AND FAT ON THE INSIDE OF MY THIGHS. NOTHING SEEMS TO WORK; THOUGHTS?

A: Yes, we can help with CoolSculpting, which is a quick and safe non-surgical body contouring treatment. The procedure freezes unwanted fat, killing off fat cells, which are then naturally eliminated from your body. No needles, no surgery, and no downtime. It is safe and effective.

Many of us have fatty areas, such as our love handles or saddlebags, that resist diet and exercise. CoolSculpting uses controlled cooling to target and crystallize fat cells; only fat cells are affected. After treatment, the crystallized fat cells are gradually removed by the immune system, resulting in a noticeable reduction.

Results are visible within four weeks of treatment and the final results are seen after three months. This is a great treatment for your boyfriend or husband also!

DOOBIE NIGHTS

ANDERSON'S STONER NOIR IS JUST WHAT THE DOC ORDERED.

INHERENT VICE* ★★★★

Starring Joaquin Phoenix, Josh Brolin, Owen Wilson, Katherine Waterston, Joanna Newsom, Jordan Christian Hearn, Eric Roberts, Serena Scott Thomas, Maya Rudolph, Jeannie Berlin, Michael Kenneth Williams, Hong Chau, Jena Malone, Reese Witherspoon, Benicio Del Toro, Jefferson Mays, Peter McRobbie, Keith Jardine, Sasha Pieterse, Martin Donovan and Martin Short. Adapted and directed by Paul Thomas Anderson, based on the novel by Thomas Pynchon. Opens in Boston on Jan. 9.

DIRECTOR PAUL THOMAS ANDERSON'S seventh film, the first adaptation of a Thomas Pynchon novel, opens on a shot of Gordita Beach in 1970. The location is fictional, but the time period isn't. Anderson and his cinematographer, Robert Elswit (an Oscar winner for lensing Anderson's There Will Be Blood), have managed to recreate Los Angeles, gloriously captured on 35mm film as though they shot it in 1970, with little of the digital trickery that tends to make movies look so unreal these days.

The ocean is viewed from a bungalow belonging to Larry "Doc" Sportello (Joaquin Phoenix), a lovelorn, mutton-chopped private dick who mumbles his way through cases not unlike Elliot Gould's Philip Marlowe did in Robert Altman's The Long Goodbye, a 1973 film that's a close antecedent to Inherent Vice. But disheveled as Gould was, his Marlowe was a suit and (loosened) tie man, while Doc is correctly described as a "dirty, filthy hippy" by his sometime squeeze, deputy district attorney Penny Kimball (Reese Witherspoon).

Doc is introduced to us by Sortilège (singer Joanna Newsom), who first appears bathed in the California sun as she begins a running narration that will continue throughout the film. Using Pynchon's inimitable descriptions from his 2009 book, she guides us toward our first view of Shasta Fay Hepworth (Katherine Waterston), Anderson's version of a femme fatale. Doc lies on his back as Shasta makes her entrance, unsure if he's hallucinating.

The music, composed by Anderson's regular collaborator, Radiohead's Jonny Greenwood, lends a somber tone to this melancholic meeting that carries through the rest of the film, which nails the sadness that's a benchmark of Pynchon's work. Anderson sustains the mood throughout—that is, when he isn't making you laugh. His picture is nothing if not an absurdist's delight.

"I need your help, Doc," says leggy bombshell Shasta, who also happens to be his ex. Currently the girlfriend of real estate magnate Mickey Wolfmann (Eric Roberts), she wants Doc to thwart a plot to kidnap the billionaire land developer that involves Wolfmann's bronzed wife (Serena Scott Thomas) and her even more bronzed lover (Andrew Simpson).

Doc's got a drug habit, and if he suffers from the occasional hallucination, it fits in nicely with Pynchon's trippy prose.

After Shasta departs in her Cadillac ragtop, Doc joins Sortilège at a beachfront pizza parlor, where our narrator—who once worked in Doc's office—recommends he do something new: "Change your hair, change your life." Back on his couch, as Doc fashions himself a perm in front of his TV, we get our first glimpse of conservative, buzz-cut Lt. Detective Christian "Bigfoot" Bjornsen (Josh Brolin, never better), who moonlights after "a day of civil rights violations" as the pitchman for Channel View Estates—a Wolfmann property. The commercial finds Bigfoot bedecked in psychedelic hippie garb. "Far out, man," he says at the end of the spot, peering directly at the leading man, intoning "What's up, Doc?"

If you haven't guessed, Doc's got a drug habit, and if he suffers from the occasional hallucination, it fits in nicely with Pynchon's trippy prose. And although Sortilège fills much of the same role she does in the novel, where Pynchon describes her as being able to "diagnose and solve all manner of problems," concluding that "she always seemed to know things that nobody else knew," I remain blissfully unaware as to whether most of her expanded appearances in Anderson's adaptation occur anywhere other than in Doc's drug-addled mind. Certainly, she clarifies clues and corrects misinterpretations for the stoned gumshoe—make that gum-sandal—but her tendency to disappear mid-conversation from the passenger seat of his moving vehicle might leave literal-minded viewers thinking the movie more Incoherent Vice than the scruffy masterpiece it is.

Fortuitously, Tariq Khalil (Michael Kenneth Williams), a member of the "Black Guerrilla Family," shows up at Doc's medical office looking for help tracking down one of Wolfmann's bodyguards, a neo-Nazi Tariq did time with. This leads Doc to a desert massage parlor, where he has the first of many encounters with Jade (comic spitfire and BU grad Hong Chau), who warns him to "beware the Golden Fang"—which might be a yacht, an Indo-Chinese heroin cartel or perhaps a "syndicate of dentists set up long ago for tax purposes," according to oral hygienist/cokehead Dr. Rudy Blatnoyd (Martin Short, recalling the deranged Dr. Verringer in The Long Goodbye).

Wolfmann disappears, and so does Shasta; both may be dead, along with surf-sax legend Coy Harlingen (Owen Wilson), who becomes part of the sprawling, meandering mystery when his recovering addict wife, Hope (Jena Malone), enlists Doc to find out what happened to him. Much of the movie hinges on the fate of the Harlingens and their infant daughter, as Doc realizes that he might be able to repair something he may never find for himself: a family.

And as viewers of Anderson's films know, fractured families, both by blood and adopted, are the beating heart of his somber tales—from Boogie Nights to Magnolia, There Will Be Blood to The Master. And as with many extended families, it might take more than one look to piece together the connections at play here. But then, this is a movie that rewards multiple viewings, where the lingering questions might amount to "Inherent twice, or Inherent thrice?" ◆

MY PICKS FOR THE ALBUMS AND SONGS OF 2014.

ALBUMS OF THE YEAR

BENJAMIN BOOKER, Benjamin Booker (ATO). It's hard to believe this New Orleans rocker was writing songs for only a few years before this invigorating debut, a raw but consummate cocktail of garage-punk and folk-blues with Hendrixian strokes.

SYLVAN ESSO, Sylvan Esso (Partisan). These indie-folk drifters hatched a danceable electro-pop debut that maintains a lightness of being. Coming from a cappella experience in Mountain Man, Boston native Amelia Meath floats and flirts across Megafaun bassist-turned-producer Nick Sanborn's processed pulses with melodic joy.

NIKKI LANE, All or Nothin' (New West). Recasting outlaw country, this Carolina-born songstress nods to Loretta Lynn, adds girl-group pop flair and caps it all with modern style and sass, abetted by producer Dan Auerbach of the Black Keys.

RUN THE JEWELS, Run the Jewels 2 (Mass Appeal). It's double the fun and fury from the hip-hop duo of former Outkast cohort Killer Mike and Definitive Jux label head El-P. The two MCs mesh coarse, quick-tongued tradeoffs and El-P's equally pointed, ominous production for a relentless bounce and flow that even seamlessly tucks in a cool cameo by Rage Against the Machine's Zack de la Rocha.

ANGEL OLSEN, Burn Your Fire for No Witness (Jagjaguwar). "I feel so much at once that I could scream," the Missouri-bred Olsen sings. But she pulls it together for a refocused second album, combining grungy rock and country swagger with melancholy, nuanced folk ruminations that soberly plumb her heart.

FKA TWIGS, LP1 (Young Turks). R&B on an abstract, impressionistic plane: Tahliah Barnett scales her vocal trapeze with aching, primal sensuality. That she earns comparisons to Aaliyah, Portishead and Björk underscores her subtle breadth.

STURGILL SIMPSON, Metamodern Sounds in Country Music (High Top Mountain). This Kentucky singer updates the conversational tone of classic Waylon Jennings with psychedelic icing and philosophical musings on love, religion, drugs and aliens.

AMBROSE AKINMUSIRE, The Imagined Savior Is Far Easier to Paint (Blue Note). This jazz trumpeter's sprawling canvas stretches from post-bop burning to collaborative glides into modern classical and soul—and a prescient tone-poem in which a child recites the names of young black men killed by police fire.

LANA DEL REY, Ultraviolence (Interscope). The hyped femme fatale turns it around for her sophomore dance. Busy producer Auerbach wraps Del Rey's bewitching voice in gauzy, cinematic shades that match her languid, noirish tales of bad romance.

ZAMMUTO, Anchor (Temporary Residence). Ex-Books principal Nick Zammuto's second release proves that an album can serve as a snapshot of its environment. Recorded last winter in a tractor shed-turned-studio on his Vermont farm, it's electronic yet earthy, experimental yet accessible, and truly of his own world.

SONGS OF THE YEAR

"Avant Gardener," Courtney Barnett (Mom + Pop). This Aussie indie-rocker drawls in heady free association about a near-fatal asthma attack. "Birth in Reverse," St. Vincent (Loma Vista). Twitchy electro-rock pumps with singer Annie Clark's skronky lead guitar. "Tie Up the Tides," Quilt (Mexican Summer). Homegrown psych-pop swirls around Anna Fox Rochinski's beguiling voice. "Take Me to Church," Hozier (Columbia). The Irish upstart delivers a starkly resonant gospel ballad, echoing vintage Elton John. "You Go Down Smooth," Lake Street Dive (Signature Sounds). The Boston-groomed combo puts harmonic levitation behind soul-jazz powerhouse Rachael Price. "So Blonde," EMA (Matador). A South Dakota native proves to be so good at futuristic grunge-pop. "Forgotten Man," Tom Petty & the Heartbreakers (Reprise). The band's return-to-form Hypnotic Eye serves a snarling slice of rock 'n' roll. "Stay With Me," Sam Smith (Capitol). The Brit soulman preaches to the quickly converted. "Could You," TV on the Radio (Harvest). The former Brooklyn art-rockers find an accessible new groove. "No Rest for the Wicked," Lykke Li (Atlantic). With a grand sweep, this Swedish chanteuse conveys heartache in fragile tones. ◆

LORD OF THE RINGS

HOSTING THE 2024 OLYMPICS IN BOSTON? WHAT COULD POSSIBLY GO WRONG?

Welcome to the 2024 Summer Olympics. I'm your host, Hologram Mayor Menino. Yes, I'm a hologram, but once again I'm having a contract dispute with the firefighters, which is why the Olympic torch is actually a flashlight on a broom handle. "You're not going to issue the permit?" I said. "I'll tape a Maglite to a stick, and then we'll see whether your drug tests screen for maca root."

Anyway, I'd like to welcome all of the International Olympic Committee officials who helped bring these games to Boston—and one Canadian in particular. Ladies and gentlemen, let's give a big hand to Dick Pound, who is a real guy! A real guy who does not even go by Richard, even though that would obviously make his life easier.

I'd also like to extend a warm Boston greeting to all of the coaches from Eastern Europe, whom we've put up in the old Bayside Expo Center. The other day a Slovakian wrestling coach came up to me and said, "This place reminds me of my youth behind the Iron Curtain, where the buildings were made of concrete and my toys were made of concrete and I trained by lifting different-sized pieces of concrete. Eventually I could pick up the back of our car, which wasn't easy, as it was a concrete car." Then she smiled and offered me a turnip. Or was it a radish? Either way, it was a gesture of international goodwill.

Boston deserved these Olympics, and I'm glad we're getting the chance to show off our venues. Some people said we didn't have enough room to accommodate all the events, but I think we're proving that wrong. Fenway Park, for instance, is hosting archery, dressage and judo, all at the same time. It's an efficient use of space, and it's gonna work fine as long as everyone keeps their head on swivel. It's definitely going to get tricky during Red Sox home games, but we did a dry run and only one guy tried to wrestle a horse.

I know we goofed on a few of our original proposals, and in retrospect the bottom deck of the Common Garage would've been a bad place to hold the trampoline competition. But I think all the swimmers are really going to like the Harbor, which is pretty much like a big ice-cold pool with boats and fish in it. You win a gold for synchronized swimming while steering clear of the Hingham ferry, and that's really an Olympic performance.

I'm also excited about the new events that are specific to Boston. We've got Moving On Sept. 1, where the athletes have to rent a U-Haul truck and move the contents of an apartment across town while 50,000 other people simultaneously try to do the exact same thing. It's a test of stamina, mental composure and outright meanness. And we've got the Common Triathlon, where athletes swim the Frog Pond, sprint along Tremont while avoiding hot T smells and then play Frisbee on the Common, even though there are kind of already a lot of people sitting on the grass. How many times will they have to say "Oops, sorry"? I can't wait to find out.

OK, a few housekeeping notes. First of all, I'd like to thank all the suburbanites who took vacation, thus ensuring that traffic flows smoothly. Or at least, it will if every commuter who took vacation stays home instead of coming to see the biggest spectacle of their lifetimes. You'll stay home, right? If you do venture into the city, please use one of our dedicated Olympics Lanes on the highways, which will route you directly to a convenient parking area just outside Pawtucket. From there, shuttles will then take you to the Cape. We told you: You're going on vacation. Get the idea? Just because I'm a hologram doesn't mean I forgot how to play hardball.

Looking ahead a little bit, before we know it the Boston Games will be in the history books. And then we'll have a conundrum, because there's nothing more depressing than Olympic infrastructure after the Olympics is over. In Beijing a few years ago, they still had the Olympic Village set up for people to visit. It's like you had a party and now people are stopping by to look at the empties and your buddy Smitty passed out on the couch. It's over! Get on with your life. That's why the second this thing's wrapped up, we're tearing it all down. Except for the Bayside Expo Center. We actually tried to demolish that place years ago, and it broke all the bulldozers. They made it out of really strong concrete.

Well, enough from me. It's time to meet our 2024 Olympic mascot. Please join me in a big round of applause for Pissa, the Grouchy Lobster. ◆ SOUND ADVICE ON SIBLING DRAMA, JOB HUNTING AND SHADY BEAUS.

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is the Boston Globe No. 1 best-seller No One Ever Told Us That, a collection of letters with life lessons for his grandchildren. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

I have been forced to estrange myself from my mother and my three older sisters because of incessant gossiping, cliques and just plain high school mean-girl behavior. Here is one example: When I have gone to family functions, one of my sisters, who is in her 50s, walks out of the room when I enter it. I have tried every way of asking them to stop their meanness, by email, via written letters and verbally, but they have, as usual, blamed everything on me. And my mother will not try to mediate a meeting so we can all get along. It has been heart-wrenching, especially during the holiday season, but I feel lost at this point. I have seen counselors and people of the cloth, and they haven't given me any substantial ways to rectify this issue. Years ago I wrote somewhere that you should "love your family, but don't let them suck the oxygen out of the room." As a result of what I had written, a young man came to see me holding a gift-wrapped package in his hands. "This is for you," he said. "You saved my life. I've had problems with my family for years, and your words gave me the courage to say to them what was on my mind about how they treated me. It lifted a huge burden from my back and set me free in a certain way."

Every family is a soap opera, and they're all dysfunctional in their own ways. But it sounds to me like you've gone way above and beyond the call of family duty in this situation. I would say get it off your chest in public and start looking for an adopted, more user-friendly family. Cinderella had horrible stepsisters. There are some people you cannot save from themselves. They may have grown up in the houses where you grew up. Move on.

I'm looking for a job, and I get all pumped up on Sunday night making lists for who I'm going to call for interviews on Monday morning. My problem is I never seem to be able to make an impact and nobody calls me back. What should I do? One of the first rules in the employment market: Never call a busy person on Monday morning looking for information or an interview. Everyone in a position of power is getting their workweek launched and in order. Your call will only annoy them and emphasize how clueless you are. Even if you're well-connected, it's best to wait until after lunch on Tuesdays. That's when workweeks are underway, and even busy people may have more time to give you a hearing. This is a simple lesson that all of you looking for jobs should take to heart.

I signed up for an online dating service and struck up a relationship with an interesting correspondent in Amsterdam. After weeks of postponing his trip to the States to meet me, he started asking for money. Is it my bad luck, or are any of these dating sites legit... and safe? Are all men just looking to take advantage? Isn't there an old line "Beware of the Dutch bearing gifts"? Sorry, that was the Greeks. I tend to be suspicious of virtual relationships. I believe in real relationships, underscored by actually eyeballing anyone with whom I might someday be involved.

We all have somewhat distorted views of our own bodies and minds. We may actually think of ourselves as being skinny, even if, in fact, we're 40 pounds overweight. The reverse can be true as well. We may think our nose ruins our entire face, when we may have the nose of a Roman emperor, which might make it attractive to all kinds of people. We all delude ourselves in certain ways, which means we can lie like hell about our real identities when trolling the digital landscape.

I find loneliness to be a terrible problem in American society, in part because we don't have close friends to unload our troubles on. So we'll pay for therapy from a professional, or we'll pay to join a site that can provide companionship and comfort. Endless people have told me disappointing stories about their experiences with the world of matchmaking. At its worst, it involves scams, like the Dutch con man looking for cash, and not love, in all the wrong places. I'd much rather join the city university club and search for someone at the events they sponsor. There are a lot of people you could love in your own city if you force yourself to get out there and be social. You don't need canals and cannabis cafes.

Many treasures, human and material, are slowly sinking on the European ship. Here in Italy, the energy is really bleak. No more dolce vita! Any advice? I'm thinking it might be wise to start renting a few months in Boston (not when it is 15 below zero) to try balancing my American life with my European one. What is your wisdom on the subject? Do you see any handwriting on the wall? The world has been going to hell for thousands of years. My kind of common sense solution here is to say: Rome is eternal... but friends mean more than Rome. So if your circle of friends is still rich with stories and ideas and adventures, then stay in Rome and carpe diem, particularly if you love your nest. But perhaps the expat life is not so romantic anymore. If the friends around you are suddenly not so satisfying, and if daily life in Italy has so many challenges that the mood is sour, then sure, rent in Boston in the fall or spring. But be sure that the daily life around you in Boston would be as rich and interesting as in Rome.

Anyway, today we are in a society that forces us to reinvent ourselves every few years. That's not such a bad thing. ◆

WORLDLY WISE

THE GLOBE-TROTTING TV HOST MAPS OUT HIS FAVORITE PLACES AND CRAZIEST STORIES.

INTREPID TRAVELER JOSH GATES, 37, IS THE HOST OF THE new Travel Channel series Expedition Unknown, premiering Jan. 8. A native of Manchester-by-the-Sea, he graduated from Tufts University, where he studied archaeology and drama. An avid scuba diver and photographer, he has traveled to more than 90 countries, participated in underwater excavations and summited Mount Kilimanjaro, and he was recently inducted into the Explorers Club. Previously the host of the Syfy series Destination Truth and Ghost Hunters Live, he chronicled his travels in his best-selling book Destination Truth: Memoirs of a Monster Hunter. His new show explores enduring legends, from the disappearance of Amelia Earhart to El Dorado, the city of gold. He lives in Los Angeles.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Do you consider travel a fundamental part of education?
JOSH GATES: Absolutely. I think it's spooky how little kids today know about geography. I think people should know more about the world and understand that it's a big place. My experience is that travel makes you a better and more interesting person. People who travel understand their place in the world and have a broader view of things.

Favorite souvenir? Great question! I have a little stone from the runway where Amelia Earhart took off from on my desk. We did our premiere episode on her, and I've always been fascinated by her. So the little rock from the last place she was seen alive.

Most exotic place you've ever been? It really doesn't get much more exotic than Papua New Guinea. They call it "The Lost World." You kind of expect a dinosaur to cross the road. It feels totally uncharted, and like anything could happen there.... When you get off the grid, you have to be very careful. We put a helicopter down in a place where these guys came out of the woods literally brandishing spears and bows and arrows. And I was helpless to communicate through it, which was the worst part.

Most endangered place? I think Cuba's pretty high on that list. It's a place that's going to change dramatically, and I'm not sure for the better, in terms of authenticity. It's the crown jewel of the Caribbean, and it's unexploited by the mega-resorts of the world, but that is going to change very soon. I think it's a place people should see sooner rather than later.

Most inspiring place? I'm going to say Southeast Asia. I have a real deep connection to that part of the world. We did an episode in Cambodia, and it's a country that's had a number of really tragic setbacks. The genocide of the Khmer Rouge dealt a pretty terrible blow, and yet you see this incredible resilience in the people. The way they've picked themselves up and put themselves back on their feet is something that I don't know if many other cultures could do. They just sort of hit the reset button and started rebuilding.

Best scuba diving spot? Sort of in my own backyard. The Yucatan Peninsula in Mexico. We did an episode for Expedition Unknown on the mysteries of the Maya. There are these incredible underwater caverns. They're pitch black, and they're sort of endless. It's just awesome. It's that weird combination of incredibly beautiful and incredibly terrifying. You half expect some ancient monster to come out of the dark.

Top three packing tips? Number one is pack less than you think you need....If you can just pack a carry-on, you should. It's incredibly liberating. You need a solid pair of shoes—a really good, sturdy pair of boots you can get muddy but still look respectable in. And finally, especially if you're an adventurous traveler, you need that great toilet kit with the necessary gastrointestinal lifesavers: Cipro, Lomotil, a Z-Pak, Pepto-Bismol. Those four things will get you pretty much anywhere in this world.

What's your favorite foreign cuisine? I'm going Southeast Asia on that. It's the best of both worlds. It's incredibly fresh. It's spicy; it's sweet. It's just awesome. If I lived in Thailand, I'd weigh about a thousand pounds.

Nastiest thing you've ever eaten? That's easy. I've eaten pretty much everything, short of human flesh, and there's nothing left on my bucket list of foods, but the only one that made me throw up immediately upon eating was balut in the Philippines. It's an egg that's almost a chicken. There's feathers in there. There's a beak. It's kind of fermented so it smells rotten. It's the Mount Everest of gross foods.

Scariest encounter with nature? I've been really lucky in that sense. I've had a lot of close calls. I guess the time there was a pit viper wrapped up in a tree right by my face in Indonesia a couple of years ago. It's one of those game-over animals.

How do you think you'd do on Naked and Afraid? I don't think I would do particularly well, honestly. I think I'd just sit still. I'd be completely boring. I don't really see myself gallivanting around the jungle nude.

How about The Amazing Race? That I think I'd do well on, because most of the action takes place at airports and airline counters, and trying to navigate unfamiliar city streets. I've been living in airports for the past 10 years.

Favorite airport? Suvarnabhumi in Bangkok. It's like a giant Battlestar Galactica spaceship. You feel like you don't need to leave. They've got everything—a place to eat, a place to sleep, a massage parlor. Forget the rest of Thailand. You can live in that airport.

Where would you go on your honeymoon? Well, I'm standing here looking at my new wife. Let's see. Either on safari or to French Polynesia. Those little huts on stilts are calling to me.

So when do you think you'll be going to outer space? As soon as I can convince the Travel Channel to pay for it. I love what [Richard] Branson and Jeff Bezos are trying to do—find ways of getting into space beyond NASA and the government. There is this promise that hasn't been fulfilled yet. I hope in our lifetime, [civilians] are able to go into space, and believe me, I'd be the first in line. ◆

PERFECT MATCH

BY MATT MARTINELLI
PHOTOGRAPHED BY JOHN HUET

Jermaine Jones has earned millions of dollars during his long soccer career, but all the money in the world couldn't buy him his dream. Finally, in June, that dream came true.

DURING THE SECOND U.S. match of the World Cup, with the Americans trailing the favored Portugal team by a goal, a corner kick bounded to the German-American midfielder. Jones steadied it on his left foot, set himself and swung his right foot—neon pink sneaker and all—straight toward the goal. The ball sliced past a frozen Portugal defender and two of Jones' teammates, curved around the flat-footed Portuguese goalie and made an audible "thwack" when it hit the twine on the back of the net. The score was tied. It was time to go crazy.

"You say to yourself ahead of time, 'If I score a goal, I'll go celebrate like this or that,'" Jones says. "But then you score and all the emotion goes out. And I saw my boys, and everybody's like, 'Go freak.'"

Jones wagged his tongue, his skinny dreads flying as he leapt into the air, mobbed by teammates. It was a goal that was years in the making. For Jones, it was the right place at the right time.

Two months later, New England Revolution president Brian Bilello slipped away from a cookout he and his wife were hosting at home. Ducking into a side room, he joined a video conference between Major League Soccer officials, who were conducting a blind draw to determine whether the Chicago Fire or the Revs would get the chance to pay Jones $4.7 million for the rest of the current season and 2015. MLS commissioner Don Garber selected an envelope at random, and just like that, the Revs won the rights to the German-born player, who had spent his entire soccer career in Europe. Bilello spent the rest of the afternoon as "the worst party host of all time," making calls to the owners, coaches and staff to celebrate and coordinate Jones' arrival. New England paid millions more than the organization had ever spent on a player, but they had their guy. For the Revs, it was the right place at the right time.

A third crucial moment arrived in late November, during the first of two playoff matches against the New York Red Bulls. The Revs were tied, and Jones was running as fast as he could down the pitch. Teammate Teal Bunbury crossed a pass toward Jones, who was in perfect position to slide toward the goal and poke the ball into the net with the inside of his left foot. The 1,200 diehard Revs fans who'd traveled more than 200 miles for the game went wild. The goal won the match and helped propel the team into its first MLS Cup appearance since 2007, reviving the on-pitch and off-pitch fortunes of one of the soccer league's founding franchises—one that's hoping to bring a soccer stadium closer to Boston. For the Revs, and for Jones, it was the right place at the right time.

"I would say it was like a dream come true since I was a kid," Jones, 33, says of his electrifying World Cup performance, one that was indeed a long time coming. He set his career in motion by enrolling in an elite soccer academy at age 14, but an injury derailed his shot to play for Germany in the 2006 World Cup. Then a rule change allowed Jones to join the American team in time for the 2010 World Cup—but after Jones switched allegiances, injury struck again, delaying his dream once more. As the 2014 competition inched closer, Jones was all too aware of how quickly another injury could sideline him. So when he finally stepped onto the pitch in Natal, Brazil, on June 16, in front of 39,000 fans, he took time to enjoy the moment.

"It was an amazing atmosphere. I think that's what every soccer player dreams of, right?"

Advancing further than most pundits expected, the U.S. men's national team scored record TV ratings and attracted thousands of people to viewing parties at City Hall Plaza and in other major cities across the country. The game against Portugal drew 25 million viewers, more than the World Series, the NBA Finals or the Stanley Cup Finals. Americans, especially the coveted 20-something demographic, were finally embracing the sport that was once seen as a strictly overseas phenomenon.

Jones parlayed his World Cup play into a lucrative opportunity to join the MLS, but he was still unsure where to play. Both the Chicago Fire and the Revolution were willing to pay the highest salary, setting up the blind draw.

"It was in my mind that I'd go to Chicago. Then my agent told me no, and he told me all the rules. He said, 'We have to see, and maybe you have to go to New England.' So, I said, 'Wait, wait, wait. I'm new to this agreement. Give me some time.' So I went back to my family [in LA], and we knew it was a long distance. But we really came fast to a decision. We said, 'That's the rules, and we have to take it like it came.'"

Bilello quickly fired off an email to Revolution owner Jonathan Kraft, who had seen his organization's fortunes rise and fall since MLS's inaugural 1996 season. Twelve years ago, Kraft says, no city wanted an expansion soccer team, but during the past year cities and investors had lined up to pay more than $100 million for a team and $200 million more for a stadium. And eight-year TV deals inked in May guaranteed the league $90 million a year in rights fees.

Boom times had arrived for MLS, but the Revs—who previously had recognizable players such as Alexi Lalas and Taylor Twellman—were missing a marketable franchise player. That all changed when Kraft, gathered with his son, his brother and his dad in the kitchen of his father Bob's Cape Cod home, looked down at his phone and saw the email from Bilello: "We won the draw."

"We were all pretty excited. We really wanted him, and the money wasn't an issue for us," Kraft says. "During the past couple of years, we had come close on a couple of occasions. And at least one of those players would've been, in terms of star power, as big as any player who played in our league, including David Beckham. And it just didn't work out."

The news of Jones' deal spread quickly to the Revs' locker room and forward Charlie Davies, who already knew Jones from the national team. When Jones arrived, Davies wasted no time giving him a tour of the city, grabbing lunch on Newbury Street, taking him to a BC football game and dining at Barcelona Restaurant & Wine Bar in Brookline. Jones soon settled into an apartment in the Seaport and found a barbershop that would twist his signature dreads every 10 days.

On the pitch, Jones was fitting in just as well. As a midfielder, he could impact the match even when he wasn't scoring. "Once he showed up, the energy changed and the concentration changed," Davies says. "Practices felt so much better because he really gave us the confidence that we could make a run at the MLS Cup."

The Revs won their first four matches with Jones in the lineup, and the midfielder assisted on a goal in each of the first three matches he started. When he missed the first half of a match against Columbus, the Revs lost. In the locker room afterward, Jones sidled up next to some of the younger players. As a World Cup veteran, he had led by example during his first month with the team, pushing them in practice, staying longer at training. Now, he needed to assume the role of a vocal leader.

"I told them, 'Look, this is a game where if you play like shit and don't do what you have to do, and everyone feels comfortable, you will lose games. But if you're focused, there are not a lot of teams who can beat our boys. We have quality, but we have to trust each other, and everyone has to do his work in his position. If everyone does that, we'll come to the finals,'" Jones recalls. "It was nice to see after that game that everyone started to do what they had to do."

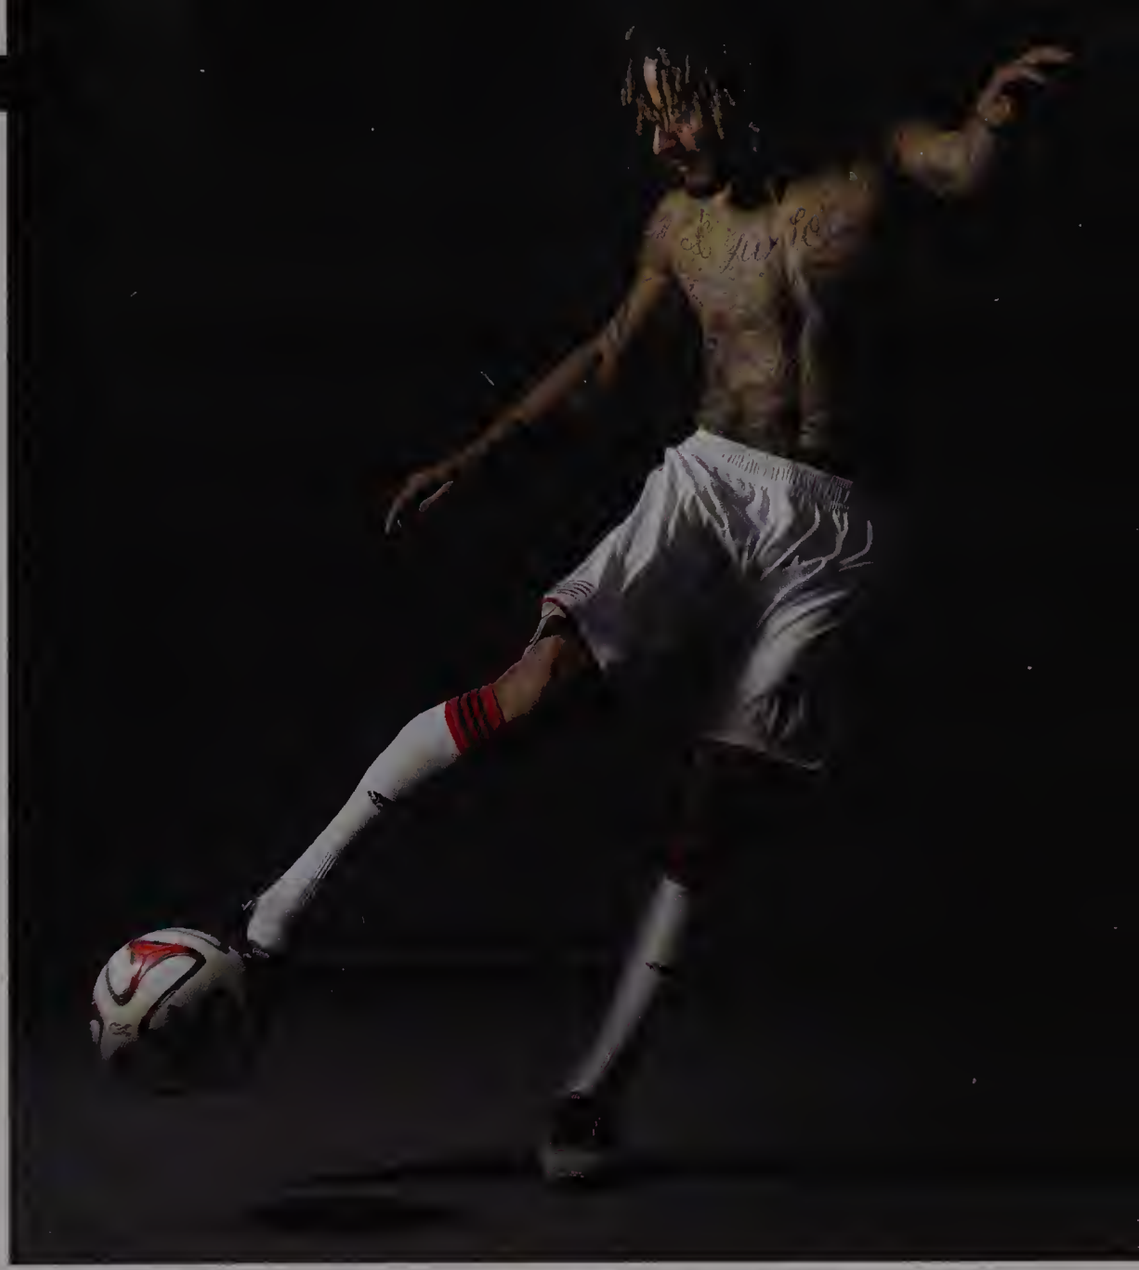
The speech helped spark a 7-match unbeaten streak that landed the Revs in the Eastern Conference Finals against New York. After winning the first match of the series, thanks to Jones' goal, the Revs returned to Gillette Stadium in Foxboro to a record crowd of 32,000 needing only a tie to advance. Two days earlier, Davies had brought Jones and a couple of other teammates to his in-laws' for a Thanksgiving meal with all the fixin's. But the crew wasn't satisfied simply shooting pool, watching football and pigging out on the eight different types of dessert. They wanted a spot in the MLS Cup. After Davies connected on two goals to give the Revs a 2-2 tie, they had it. During the postgame celebration, Jones grabbed the trophy and sprinted toward the supporters' section behind the goal. He climbed the stand where the cheers are led and started posing for selfies with the fans.

"He has a true desire to interact with the fans and show them his appreciation"

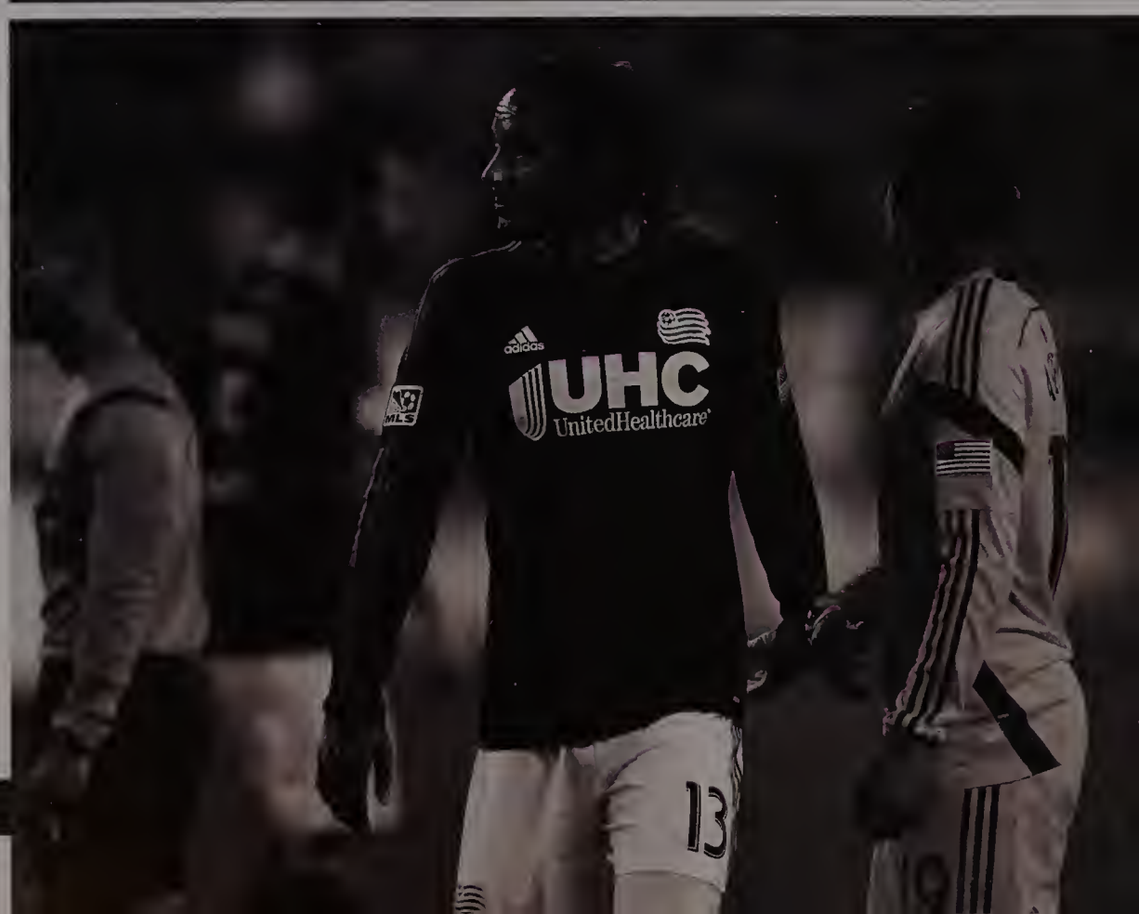
"That's just Jermaine. That's who he is. He's like, I'm getting the trophy and I'm going up there," Bilello says. "It wasn't me saying, 'Tell Jermaine he's gotta go up there.' Or our PR person saying, 'It'd be really cool if we had a picture.' He has a true desire to interact with the fans and show them his appreciation."

The buzz built during the next week, and by the time the Revs took the pitch in Los Angeles, they had finally earned some time in the spotlight at home. The MLS Cup, which the Revs lost in overtime 2-1 to the LA Galaxy, earned a 3.1 TV rating in the Boston market. While Jones and teammates spoke of pride in the 2014 campaign and expectations for next season, something even more important was brewing in Boston. Mayor Marty Walsh and the Krafts were engaging in stadium talks.

"They see value for what a building like this could do for a community. The prior administration did not share the same view, so we weren't able to make progress in the years before Mayor Walsh's administration," Kraft says, referring to a city stadium in general while staying mum on the specific site, rumored in The Boston Globe to be along Interstate 93 next to the West Fourth Street bridge in South Boston. "Given the passion of the Boston sports fan and the quality of the stadium we would build, I'd like to think we would become the model for the league in terms of the total package for a franchise."



Bilello looks at city stadiums used by teams such as Portland and Seattle and sees the value of a venue that's T accessible. Size is another consideration. When the MLS began, nearly every team was playing in cavernous football stadiums, but now the Revs are among only a handful of teams in the league to do so. In the city, they're confident that they could fill a smaller dedicated soccer stadium with 20,000 seats and a more appealing atmosphere for fans. The Revs' average attendance this season was more than 16,000, and they've already sold more season ticket packages for 2015 than in 2014.



For Jones, who has one year remaining on his contract, any stadium would be built long after he's left New England. He still yearns to play closer to his wife and five kids on the West Coast, wearing his affinity for LA not just on his sleeve but in ink on the center of his tattoo-covered torso, and that may happen as soon as the 2016 season.

"It is a problem that they're so far away. I'm a family guy, and I want to see my wife and my kids every day. It's not easy, but who knows? It was my position to come to New England, and I'll work hard for that 1 1/2–year contract and do my best. After that, I will sit down and discuss," Jones says. "It was nice for me that I didn't go to a team like Toronto or Seattle or LA. I went to a team in New England that until that moment had ups and downs. It was a young team, and from the beginning that I came, we got on a good roll."

He does know what an urban stadium would mean for the city and the organization: "People are really interested in soccer, and you can fill the whole stadium with a good crowd for every game. For me, the time is too long. I think it is five or six years away, but maybe I'll come watch it when it's finished. That will be good."

Wherever or whenever a stadium is built, the foundation was laid with the acquisition of Jones. The same year his World Cup dreams came true, he ignited interest in U.S. soccer and the Revs. While his play has drawn rave reviews, it's his timing that's never been better. ◆

LOVE IN THE TIME OF TINDER

A singleton braves Boston's digital dating scene—and more—to find out what's beyond the swipe.

BY ALEXANDRA CAVALLO
ILLUSTRATED BY WYETH YATES

I recently received my first unsolicited photo from a potential online suitor—a photo of an orca whale.

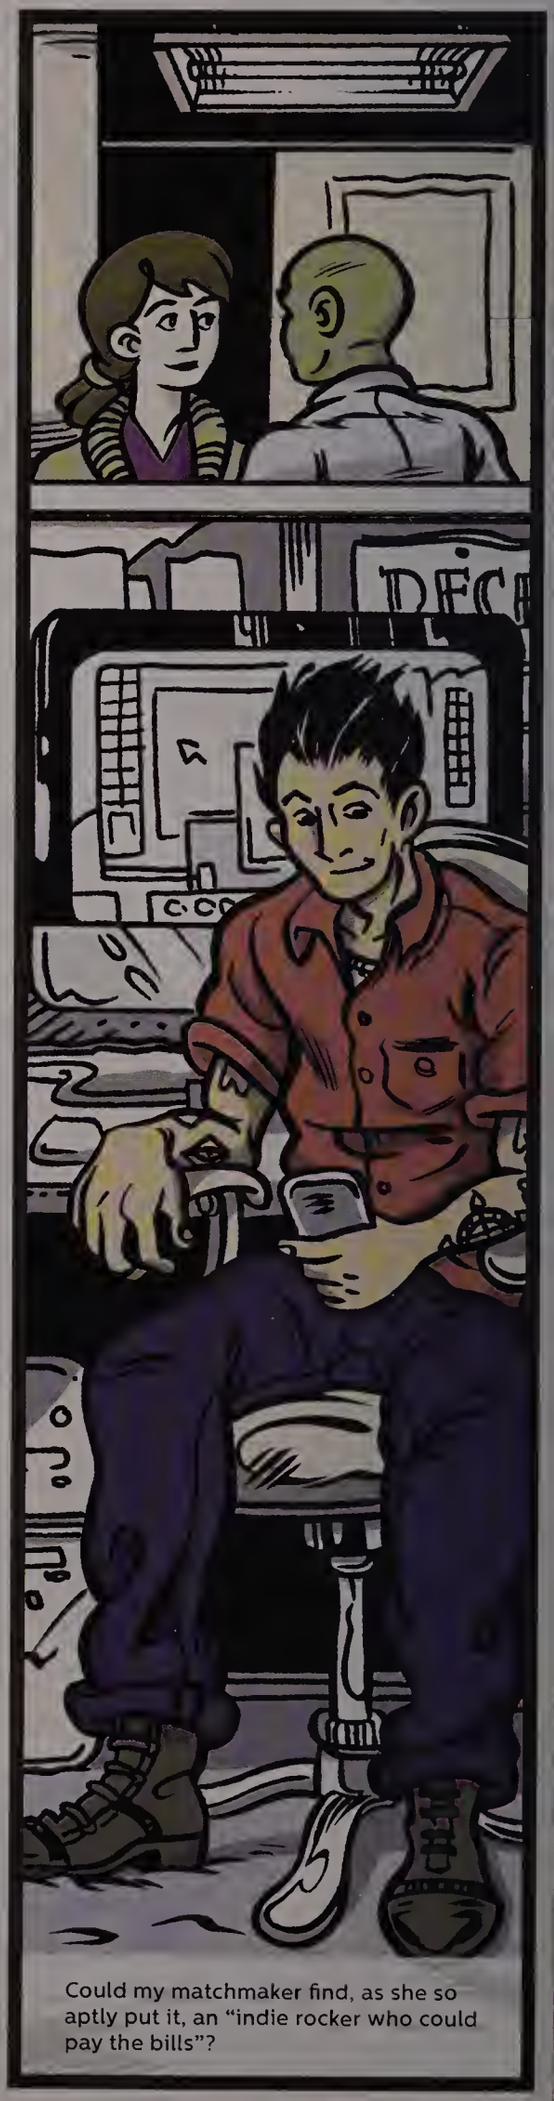
Some backstory: I was staring down the cool barrel of 30, and despite fervent protestations that I was happy alone and not in the market for a husband (or even a casual boyfriend), I'd just succumbed to gentle suggestions from friends and family that I might at least open myself up to the possibility of meeting that elusive Special Someone. Well, fine.

I dutifully filled out my newly minted OkCupid and Tinder accounts. I chose OkC because a good buddy of mine had found himself an awesome girlfriend on the site and Tinder because, well, duh.

More important, both are free and seem less serious than pay-to-play sites like Match (largely for marriage-minded daters) or eHarmony (largely for Jesus-minded daters, I think). And those are just the "mainstream" sites. If I were the rustic type, I might try FarmersOnly. If I didn't love bread so much, GlutenFreeSingles.

Like many people, I got a thrill out of the easy Tinder game of swiping left for "no thanks" or right for "well, maybe" depending purely on how doable a guy looked. After a lot of left swiping, I matched with a man who seemed promising. He hit all my checkboxes. Dark-haired and slightly dangerous-looking? Check. Covered in tattoos? Check, check! He claimed to "represent a couple artists in the music industry," and his photos painted him as a dude who liked to drink beer, owned a motorcycle and had a general disregard for the Establishment. Basically, the kind of guy Mom would rather you didn't bring home.

We exchanged a flurry of Tinder messages, mostly about our favorite bands, and it was going well enough that I handed over my number so we could set up a time to meet IRL. That's when things got weird. Casual pressure for sexts ("nip pics"—ew) turned to anger, and after declaring that we "were done here," he sent me the fateful whale photo, with the text "this is your selfie." As baffled as I was by this rather clumsy attempt at a fat joke (did he have that photo saved on his phone, just for moments like this?), I was more confused by how quickly the whole encounter had gone south. I stopped using Tinder soon after.



But I was curious. As the city's ONEin3 initiative notes, Boston is home to the largest proportion of young adults of any major U.S. city, and 82 percent of those 20- to 34-year-olds are still unmarried, no less. So why was it so hard to meet a not-creepy person to have a beer with in this town? Perhaps if I changed my methods, it might alter the madness? So I embarked on a quest to try a number of different Boston dating apps and services, to see what else was out there.

First up was Who's That, a group-dating app created by BU grad Sam Davidson and BC alum Brian Sachetta. Who's That takes some cues from the popular New York-based startup Grouper. You sign up with a couple of single friends, upload some flattering pictures and go fishing for another group to meet for a date. The idea is that meeting up en masse takes off some of the pressure, and the app attempts to address the pitfalls of nearly blind dates by pulling information from Facebook, so you can see who and what you have in common.

I downloaded the app, which was fairly easy to navigate if not very sophisticated, and coerced a couple of single friends into joining the experiment. There was only one problem: The median age of the guys on Who's That appeared to be around 22. I was hard-pressed to imagine what group of baby-faced early 20-somethings would have a whole lot of interest in meeting some 30-year-old ladies for drinks. Why, thank you, sonny, I would love a shot of Metamucil with my cocktail. If you're lucky maybe I'll take you for a ride on my Rascal later, if you know what I mean.

If joining OkCupid and Tinder had initially smacked of desperation and general ineptitude, joining a matchmaking service seemed downright insane.

Another problem was that there didn't seem to be many people using the app yet. It launched quietly just this past spring, and until mid-July it was only open to current college students—kind of like Facebook, until all the old folks joined and ruined it. I'd scroll through the same groups of Sox-hat-wearing youngsters, clutching cans of Bud Light in grainy profile pics, until: Bam! We "matched" with a trio of rather impossibly attractive 30-something men. "Quick, let's send them a message," my friend slurred over our third pitcher as we watched football at a bar with some friends one cold Sunday night.

Could my matchmaker find, as she so aptly put it, an "indie rocker who could pay the bills"?

Another less beer-saturated friend leaned over to peek at the guys' pics. "Um, I think these are stock photos," she said. We squinted at my phone. She was right. All the photos were suspiciously slick and well produced. I had reached a new low—catfished by an iPhone application.

Next came the Cambridge-based Singled Out. Like Who's That, Singled Out pulls info from Facebook, automatically choosing your profile photo and, for some reason, listing my high school as my highest level of education, an error it wouldn't let me change. It positioned my photo—in which I'm dressed as Sonic the Hedgehog for Halloween—so that all that was visible was one bright blue elbow. I wasn't sure there were many guys out there, on this app or otherwise, looking to date a big blue elbow without a college degree and didn't have high hopes for success.

The idea behind Singled Out is to create a safe dating space for women, allowing female users to control the conversation by posting yes-or-no questions to which male users respond. A man can't message a woman; he can only answer a poll question ("Do you have sex on the first date?") and hope that she likes his answer—and his looks—and starts a conversation.

"Anyone normal using this app?" I posted. And waited. A day later, I had only two responses. Both said "yes" (I was dubious), and both were under 21 years old. One's profile photo was a blurry picture of a dog, presumably his. Unless it was him. The other's profile said he was 19, but he looked about 12. I half-heartedly posted a few more questions—"Are aliens real?" "Is this real life?"—and pulled a handful of responses, none from anyone who looked old enough to shave. I wasn't looking to do jail time and quickly deleted the app.

A friend had told me about another dating site, Jess, Meet Ken, founded by a BC business school grad. Launched this past February, it aims to put female users in control by inviting women to "recommend" the single guys in their life to other single women. The idea is interesting: A woman knows a great guy who, for whatever reason, just isn't for her. He could be a platonic friend, a sweet ex, a hapless co-worker—if she thinks he's got the goods, and other women might benefit from knowing it, she can make a profile for him on Jess, Meet Ken, named for the founder, Ken Deckinger, who met his wife through a similar recommendation.

I made a profile on the site, then still in its beta phase, citing my likes ("beer, music, horror movies, coats, jokes, iced coffee, people who can hang, good grammar, dudes with tattoos, the Oxford comma") and my dislikes ("waking up in the morning, romantic comedies, mornings in general, bad jokes, people who can't take a joke, dudes with bad tattoos, people who can't hang, jam bands, mean-spiritedness").

"People who can hang?" sighed a co-worker, who had reservations about how I was selling myself.

FAMOUS FIRST WORDS

Don't get me wrong. There are great guys on online dating sites. Witty guys. Eloquent guys. But there are also a lot of...weird guys. (And girls, I'm quite sure. This one included.) Sometimes my favorite part of checking my inbox is finding out what a guy has chosen for his opening line. Sometimes they're creepy, sometimes inscrutable, sometimes just plain odd. Below is an anonymous selection of some personal favorites.

What do you like/dislike? Any specific suggestions for improvement? I know this may be a strange request, but this is not a joke. I just want to improve my profile. So it is important that you are honest. Don't worry, I have thick skin. And think of this as your community service for the week. Thanks in advance!

I saw that you visited my page but didn't reply.

So your first thought is probably, "But you live in Abu Dhabi?"... So my question to you is... Feeling adventurous?

Hi you doing.

Drinks and casual sex? ;)

Hey did you read my last message? Was it to [sic] obnoxious or you're just not interested? Should I take the hint? Lol

I want your number.

Has anyone ever compared you to Kate Middleton, future Queen of England?

Uh Hey baby lol?

Who is your favorite Disney character?

I work for Uber and I think I drove you before.

What's your favorite cupcake?

Can I watch a movie and cuddle with you sometime?

*Nice ass. :)

Hey! I'm going to be coming to Boston for the second time ever this Saturday-Wed and I'd love to explore with you. We're both tall and extremely good looking, so there's a chance that we'd get along!

Would you be friends with a nudist?

What's the creepiest message you've gotten on here? haha

What's up! Do you smoke weed?

*Ed. note: There are no ass photos on the profile.

Given that I'm a firm believer in honesty in marketing (my OkCupid bio says I'm good at "making mix CDs, procrastinating, correcting your grammar, getting stains on a white shirt and finishing all the wine"), I pressed save and assured her that this was indeed the person I wanted to present to the world. Surely this, the most promising of the sites and apps so far, would prove fruitful.

Think again. Most of the guys on the site were very young (noticing a trend here) and very not my type. (Think lots of sporty finance types. I tend to like 'em artsy and broke.) After scrolling through the posted men, one of whom was recommended by his mother, I settled on three. I sent friendly introductory messages to the women who'd recommended them—two friends and co-worker, respectively—and...waited. I'm still waiting.

At this point in my adventure I was disillusioned—both with online dating and with my own ability to even get a damn date. Was I completely and utterly hopeless? I was almost ready to give up. Then I heard about Three Day Rule, a self-professed modern matchmaking service headquartered in LA, with matchmakers in New York, San Francisco and Chicago, and newly launched here in Boston.

Meeting someone you know only through photos and messages on the Internet is weird enough. Meeting someone another woman picked up on your behalf, whom you have never spoken to, is some next-level strange.

If joining OkCupid and Tinder had initially smacked of desperation and general ineptitude, joining a matchmaking service seemed downright insane. However, I was determined to find a decent date—if not for my love life, then for the sake of this story. So one rainy afternoon, I found myself sitting in the Mandarin Oriental's ornate lobby across the table from my matchmaker, McKenzie, a friendly, pretty blonde about my own age who assured me she would find my inked-up Prince Charming. I was skeptical, but intrigued.

Named for Vince Vaughn and Jon Favreau's characters' dating rule in Swingers, Three Day Rule is a thorough, carefully curated service: You tell your matchmaker who and what you're looking for—physically, emotionally, cosmically, whatever—and they go out and find it, meeting with the potential match in person before making a connection. It's usually at least a six-month process, but McKenzie had just six weeks to find me my ideal man. Our deadline looming, we got to work.

First, we covered my past serious relationship history (none to speak of!), my dating history (a lot of drunken, casual hookups—sorry, Mom and Dad!) and, finally, what I was looking for at this juncture in my life (a guy who can...hang). McKenzie seemed more intrigued than horrified—I think she was up for a challenge. Next, she asked me to outline what I was into physically. Tall, but not too tall. In shape, but not beefy. Lean, but not skinny. Fit, but the type of guy who's more likely to spend his weekends in a dark bar than out for a jog. Slightly alternative looking. Cool shoes. Ink. As I rattled off my increasingly ridiculous requirements, McKenzie took notes. "Must not love sports." "Makes decent money, but preferably in a creative field." "Doesn't care about his looks, but, you know, looks awesome." "Doesn't wear a suit to work."

It was becoming increasingly clear that the biggest problem in my dating life was me. As I quietly worried that I might be insane (and the genteel older couple seated next to our table likely wondered the same), McKenzie took measure of the monumental task she faced. Astoundingly, she seemed optimistic. At least one of us was.

She sent me on my way with the assurance that she'd have found, if not my dream man, then a cool enough guy within the next two weeks. She had even come up with a tagline for her search: "Indie rocker who can pay the bills." Meanwhile, she offered to set me up with a dating coach and a stylist if I wanted a pre-date makeover, both perks of Three Day Rule's service. I declined the makeover but took her up on the offer to speak with a coach—it seemed like I needed one.

I spoke with my dating coach, Kim, who's based in LA, over the phone. We chatted for almost 45 minutes, during which time she tried to get a feel for how I usually approached dates and picking up guys in general. (Zero expectations and a lot of cocktails.) She had some suggestions.

MATCH POINTS

To make sure I'd done my homework, I tapped Carly Spindel, one-half of the mother-daughter duo behind New York-based "high-end" matchmaking service Janis Spindel Matchmakers (which has locations across the country, including in Boston), for some pro tips for the hapless dater. And while the type of dating this particular single is looking for is far from, well, "high-end," some of her advice was universal.

1 MAKE A LIST Create a list of what you're looking for in a partner. When you write down your top qualities, you focus better.

2 STAY INFORMED Knowing what's going on in the world is essential for those early conversations. Spend a few minutes each day reading the news so you're up on current events.

3 PUT YOUR BEST FOOT FORWARD When you walk into a room, you only have one chance to make a great first impression. Make sure you're wearing an awesome outfit that makes you look and feel great—confidence is sexy. And don't forget to smile!

4 KEEP AN OPEN MIND Quite often, we're too quick to judge, deciding someone's not for us in the first five minutes of meeting. Before you rule someone out, give the person a chance. You'd be amazed at how often people can surprise you.

5 BUT TRUST YOUR GUT Intuition is a gift from the universe. If you've been out with someone and it just doesn't feel right, trust your feelings. Your inner self knows best.

"Think about the bar like a party you're hosting," for one. Meaning, be the vivacious center of the room—the hostess with the mostest that everyone wants to talk to. Then she gave me a homework assignment. That weekend, I was tasked with practicing the "five-second smile" on a guy I found attractive at a bar: Catch a guy's eyes, hold them for five seconds, look away, then look back and smile in what I imagine is meant to be a come-hither way. Since I tend to be more comfortable standing with my back against the wall and my eyes cast down into my beer than eye-canoodling with dudes at my own private bar party, I was leery, but agreed to try it. It wasn't so bad! (Though I'm pretty sure my "come-hither" could use a little work. OK, a lot of work.)

Finally, it was time for the Big Date. I was to meet [name redacted for the purposes of not being a total dick] for drinks and, hopefully, some decent conversation. I was terrified.

Meeting someone you know only through photos and messages on the Internet is weird enough. Meeting someone another woman picked up on your behalf, whom you have never spoken to, is some next-level strange. However, despite all my past dating fails, I was eager to see who my matchmaker had found. She'd "scouted" him outside a show at local rock club, showed him my photos, told him a bit about me (sugar-coating smoothly over some rough spots, I would assume) and essentially asked him if he'd be up for going on a date with some chick he'd never met. Incredibly, he was.

It was becoming increasingly clear that the biggest problem in my dating life was me.

McKenzie prepped me for the date that afternoon. Be open-minded, she implored me. (I'd expressed some reservations that he didn't fit my exact type, according to the photos she'd sent my way.) She described this guy as cool, sarcastically funny and, most important, a dude she truly believed could hang. I promised open-mindedness and headed out.

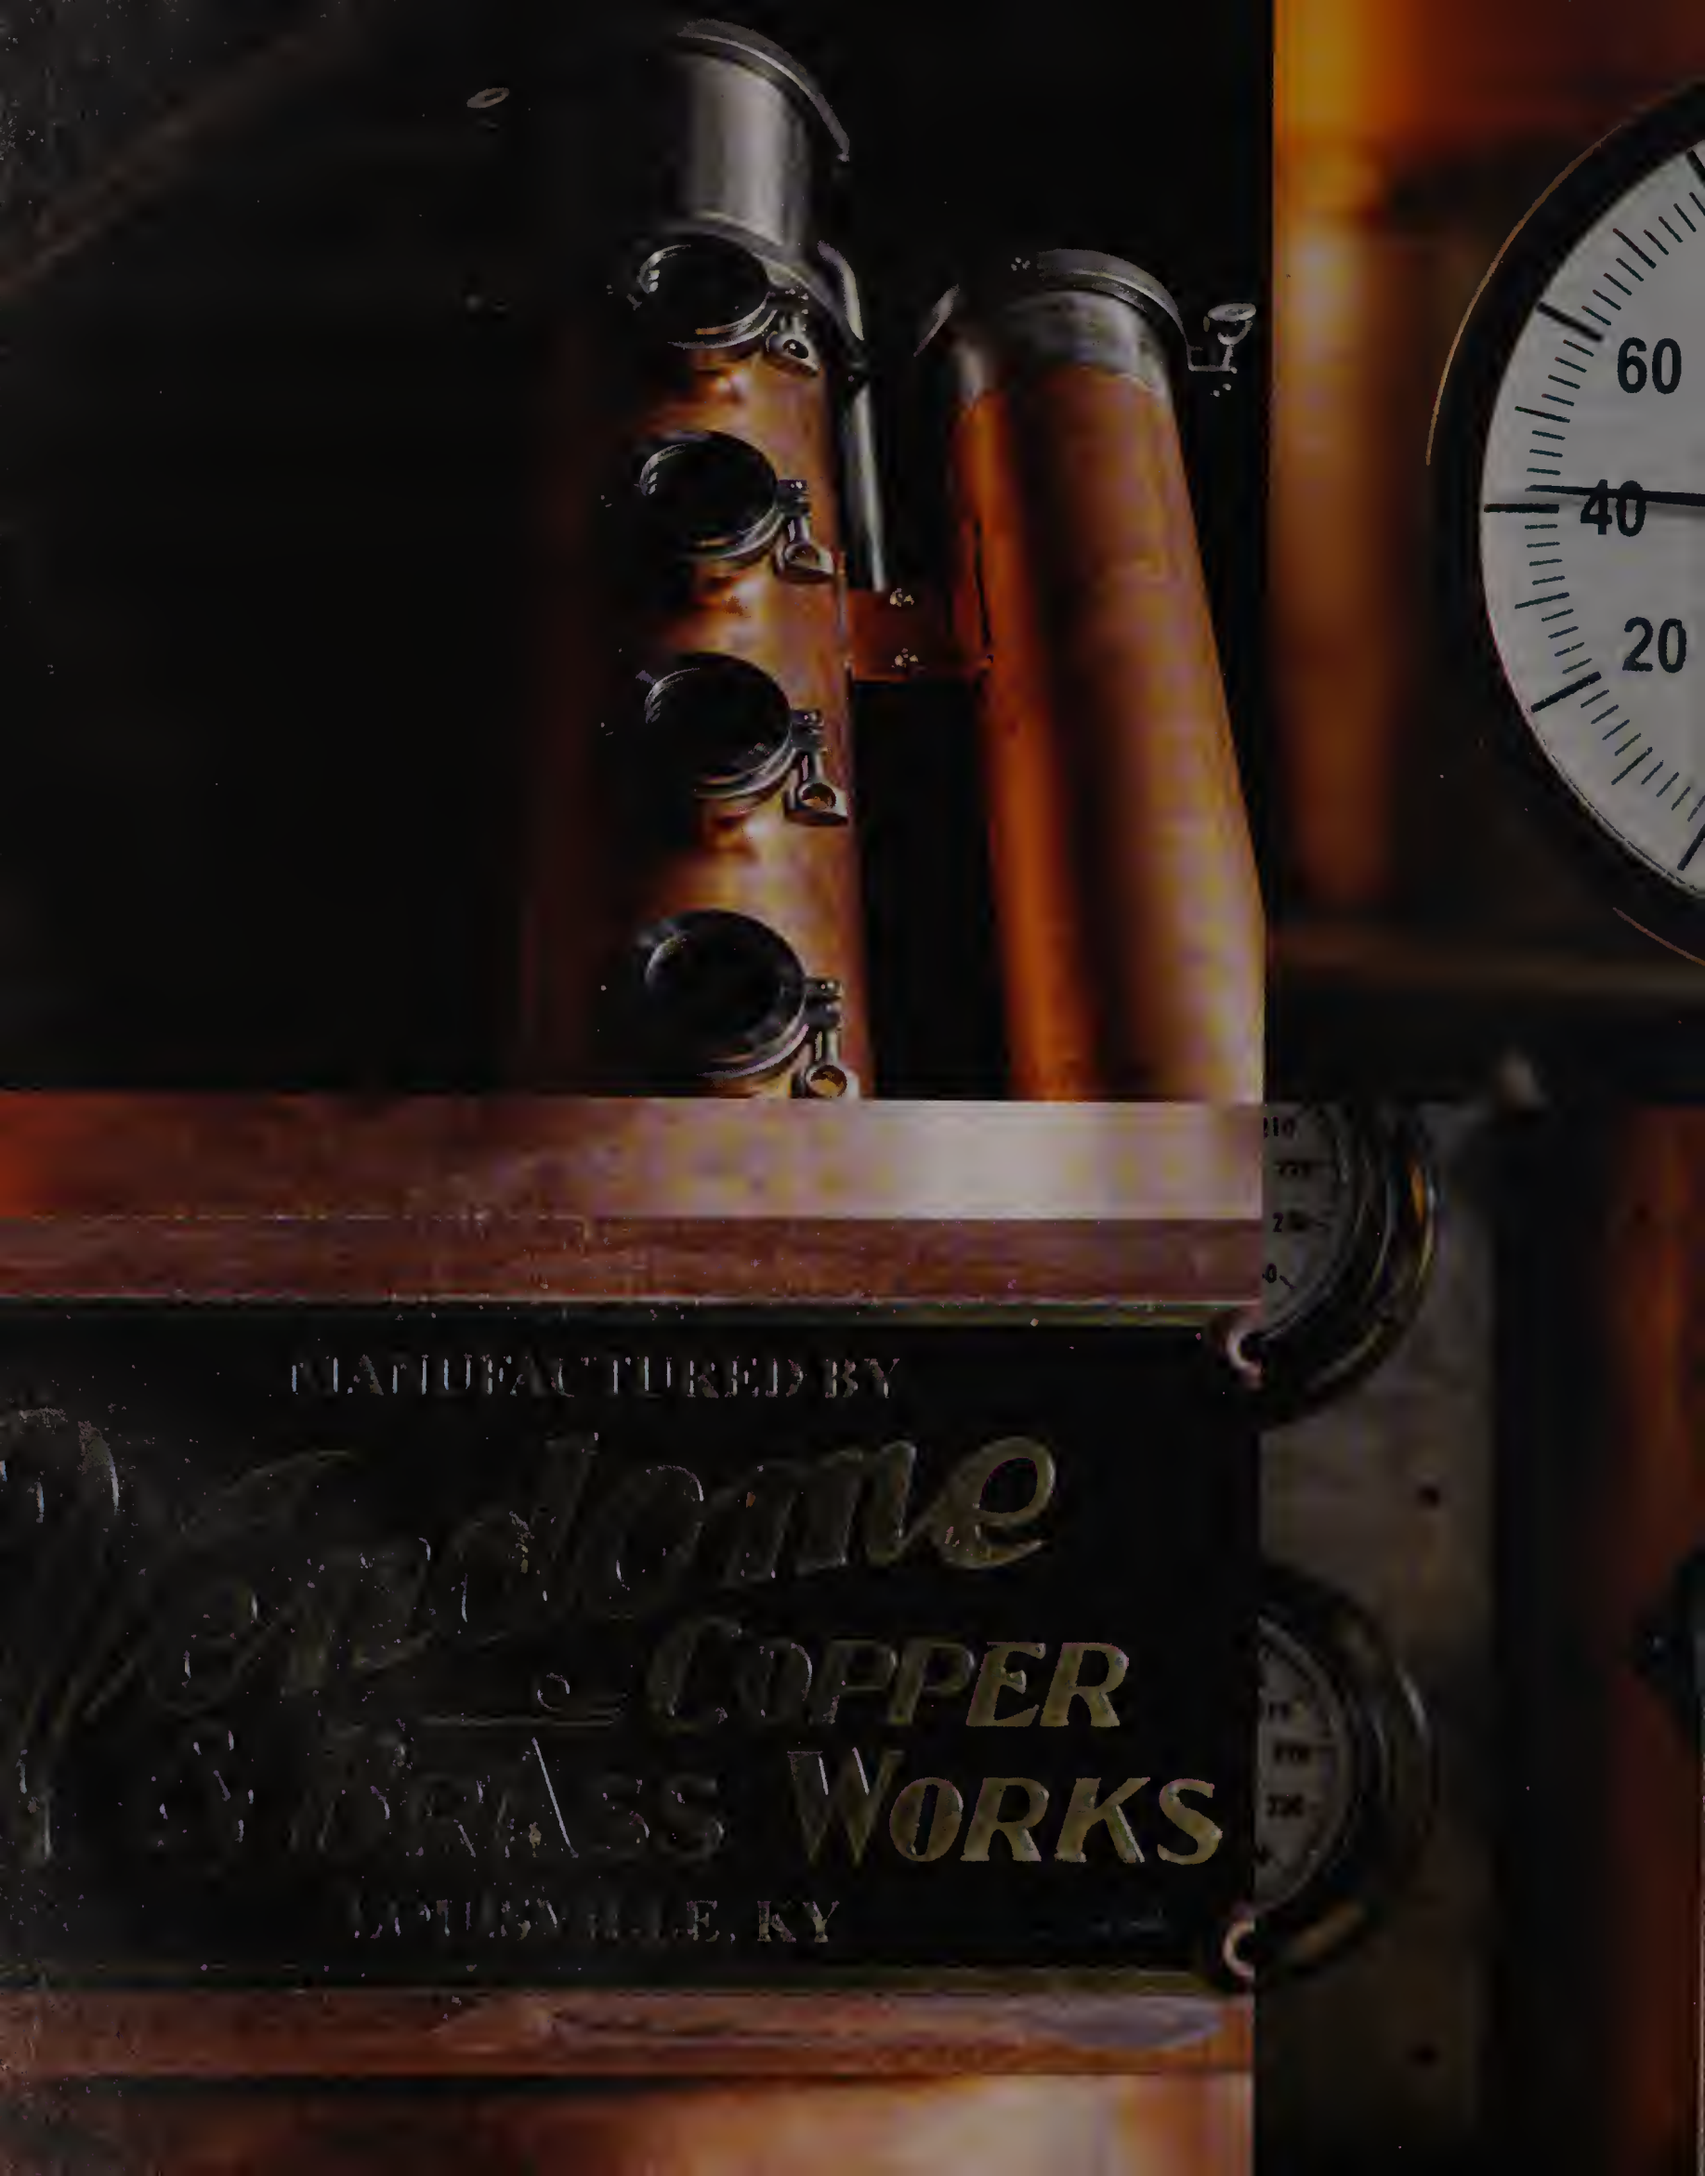
The person who showed up for the date was pretty much as advertised. Cuter than his photos, fairly sarcastic—definitely down to hang. One drink turned into seven, and I found myself genuinely having a pretty OK time.

The point of this whole—weird—thing, I think, is that sometimes there is no point. Sometimes you go on a date that you're excited about and it's a total bust. Sometimes you just score a few drinks and some sex. Sometimes you go on a date you're not at all excited about and it ends up pretty OK. Sometimes you're just sending messages into an Internet void. But it really is important to be open-minded—both about what you want and how you go about finding it. Maybe you meet a prince. More likely you end up making out with a horny toad. It's important to remember, though, that there are just as many weirdoes online as there are in real life. I find that strangely comforting.

As for the date, we've made plans to hang out again, and whether there ends up being that kind of chemistry, I'm at least confident there will be beers and some laughs. We've been texting. I've yet to receive a photo of a marine mammal of any kind. ◆

TOUGH LOVE

Emily Romano knows a thing or two about doling out frank lessons in love (and like). The 30-year-old Bostonian dropped out of law school to become a matchmaker and, after honing her love connection skills, founded Dateover, a dating consultation company. She's also working with MIT on a new tech startup called Vattri, which aims to provide a vetting process to eliminate many of the question marks of online dating—in other words, to help keep you from getting catfished.



For Dateover, Romano essentially assesses every aspect of a client's dating life, from the relatively superficial, like wardrobe choices and online profiles, to personal hang-ups and other more deep-seated issues. After a judgment-free consultation, she creates what she calls a "proposal." I met with Romano to get one of my own. Here were her suggestions for taking my single steez to the next level. I think I'm even going to try them.

THE INITIAL ASSESSMENT: "Your Dateover is really all about letting yourself be open to the possibility that a relationship can be a positive thing, and being open yourself emotionally." [I have o problem with "feelings."] Keeping things casual [a guy thot con hong!] is one way of doing this. Another way is dating someone that we write off before we even begin. [Everyone I've ever "doted."] I always say, 'Emotionally unavailable people go after people who are physically unavailable,' and this is true. Someone can go after someone who lives far away, someone married or someone who for whatever reason is 'unfit' for us to date." [Unfit hos, ot times, been on understotement.]

THE RECOMMENDATION: "Having an objective: Go on one date a week with someone, go places with the intention of meeting men, be cognizant of body language. [I've been told mine soys, "Please don't come over here. I am o cyborg from Plonet Awful."] Smile... take off your jacket." [I don't take my coots off in bors. It is super weird.]

THE ONLINE PROFILE TIPS: "Take out the fact you cannot live without alcohol...it doesn't need to be said." [In retrospect, this should have been obvious.]

THE WARDROBE CRITIQUE: "It seems to me being sexy might be a bit uncomfortable to you. [Woit, woit. Beonies ond dirty old Chucks oren't sexy?] I think you should stay true to your personal style. However, boots with a heel, a lower-cut shirt, maybe a dress and maybe some color? [I weor a lot of block is olso an understatement.] Challenge yourself to embrace change for the sake of shaking things up a bit."

ANOTHER ROUND

Spirited entrepreneur Rhonda Kallman gives whiskey a shot with Boston Harbor Distillery.

Most people would expect Boston Beer Company co-founder Rhonda Kallman to be raising a frosty mug to toast the start of 2015. But when the ball drops, she'll actually be savoring a sip of Putnam New England Whiskey—the result of her latest venture as CEO of the new Boston Harbor Distillery.

"When Jim Koch first asked me to help start Boston Beer Company back in 1983, I was a whiskey drinker," Kallman recalls. "I just didn't drink beer then. He said, 'I'll make you something that you like.' And of course, he did!"

Today, Kallman's drinks of choice also include her own Lawley's New England Spirit, made with molasses and Vermont maple syrup, and Seymour's Local Roast Coffee Liqueur, crafted with Berkshires-roasted beans at an 1855 building in Dorchester overlooking Boston Harbor. The names honor the site's former occupants—Putnam Nail Co., the Seymour Ice Cream Company and shipbuilders George Lawley & Son. "It's really exciting to be able to bring back this entrepreneurial center of Boston and give new life to this beautiful brick-and-beam building with 100 windows," Kallman says. "The building's just got fantastic views of the skyline. It's so great to enjoy with a cocktail in your hand."

That's exactly what spirits enthusiasts will be able to do at tours, tastings and classes in early 2015, when BHD plans to open as the third craft distillery in Boston proper, after Bully Boy and GrandTen. "Rhonda and I talk about this every single week: Nobody really needs another bottle of liquor. I'll be the first one to admit that," says BHD co-founder Corey Bunnewith, a veteran of Drink, the bar at Coppa and his own beverage consulting biz. "But Boston Harbor Distillery is filling the need for a new experience in Boston. It is the whiskey paired with our people, customers, space and the experience that comes with those things that really makes us unique."

Also unique: BHD will be the only distillery in the city with a female founder. It's a path Kallman's been down before.

"There were no other women in the [beer] industry when I started, so I was really breaking all of the rules," Kallman says. "When you're a woman in a bar at all times of the day and night, you'd better have a thick skin." She got her start working as a secretary for Jim Koch's consulting firm by day and moonlighting as a waitress and bartender by night, experience that helped prompt Koch to tap the 24-year-old Kallman to co-found Boston Beer Company. Koch says he admires her continued tenacity. "My first hire was my best hire ever. Rhonda was smart and capable and thrived in a mostly male-dominated industry."

Honored as the "Pioneering Woman in the Beer Industry" in 1990 by the Institute for Brewing Studies, Kallman promoted the hiring and mentoring of women within Boston Beer Company and laid the groundwork for expansion to cider and hard tea, helping fuel the exponential growth of the brand. And though she left Boston Beer Company in 2000 to found the now-defunct New Century Brewing Company—maker of a lightly caffeinated beer that got squeezed by tightened FDA beverage standards—Kallman still reflects on her early struggles getting her foot in the door as one of her biggest professional challenges. "I wasn't taken seriously, no matter whether I was walking into a restaurant to try to sell them my beer, standing in a package store or walking into a boardroom," she says. "But after I spent a few minutes engaging somebody, they realized that I knew my stuff."

Today, expertise in the beer industry makes transitioning to craft spirits a natural and savvy move, says Andrew Faulkner, vice president of the American Distilling Institute. "What is whiskey but distilled beer? Without a doubt, it's a logical progression," he says. And just as the craft-beer market boomed—from 44 breweries in 1980 to more than 3,000 as of June, according to the Brewers Association—the number of domestic craft distillers has risen too, from 52 in 2005 to 425 at year's end in 2013. But there is still room for growth, Faulkner says.

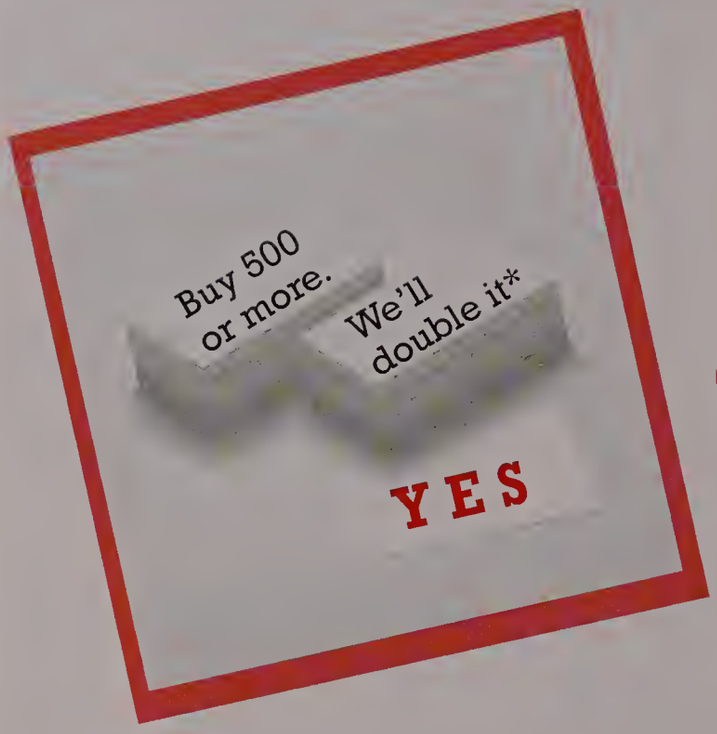
Kallman shares that sentiment. "If you look at the cycle over the decades [of craft beverages], it really starts with jug wine, like Gallo and that stuff. It used to be over 80 percent of the volume, and now that 80 percent has shifted to a focus on small, independent producers and artisan quality. And then we saw beer follow that," says Kallman, who believes craft distilling can follow a similar path. "I thought this was a once-in-a-lifetime chance, and I wanted to take that leap of faith," she says, while acknowledging the challenges ahead. "[Change] doesn't happen fast. ... We're over 50 years into this thing, and craft beer is still just 8 percent of all U.S. beer consumption—not that you'd know that in Boston!"

The latest issue of Distiller magazine offers reason for optimism, noting, "The market continues to grow along the same trajectory as the craft brewing market, and perhaps even faster, doubling every three years with regularity." But continued success may depend, in part, on the growing ranks of women who imbibe. Beer Advocate managing editor Ben Keene points to data from the Brewers Association that shows that women between the ages of 21 and 34 now consume 15 percent of the total volume of craft beer in the U.S. "When you compare that with even five years ago, my guess is it would have been half of that," Keene says. "That number may not look so impressive now, but it is foreshadowing to me of the potential of winning over women in craft spirits, beer and cider."

"There were no other women in the [beer] industry when I started, so I was really breaking all of the rules."

He cites tasting rooms and education as key to that, and to the business models of most successful craft outfits. "People can know what goes into it and what to expect. It makes a difference when those same people go to a bar or bottle shop; they're so much more knowledgeable," says Keene, who released the book The Great Northeast Brewery Tour earlier this year. "I think that's huge, specifically with women's experiences in the past, that kind of speaking to that audience just wasn't there."

Hadley Douglas, co-owner of the Urban Grape, has seen that happen firsthand. "When we opened, women were coming in and buying brown spirits for their husbands or boyfriends and feeling very unsure of what to get. [Women's] 'territory' was vodka and clear spirits and things to be made into a cocktail," Douglas recalls. But after almost five years of classes and tasting sessions—especially for whiskey—many customers are more comfortable asking for something new, and she says women's surging interest in brown spirits has helped fuel plans to expand beyond the Chestnut Hill and South End stores in 2015. "They're thinking, 'This is cool, it's not just for the boys. I want to learn what should be a cocktail and what I should put an ice cube into.'"



Meaghan Sinclair and Harmony Dawn Kelly have seen a similar shift since founding their cocktail class and catering service, Booze Époque, to help drinkers bust "outside the rum and Coke, scotch on the rocks" rut, Sinclair says. "It's great being two women, because a lot of bartenders are male, it can be a difficult niche for women to fall into. I think that's exciting for people to see."

In their signature cocktail class, they've seen more women reaching for darker spirits like bourbon and cognac. And on the catering side, there are frequent requests for local products—including spirits from local distillers, Sinclair says. She predicts more women will come to the forefront of the distilling industry, in part thanks to Boston's excellent colleges. "There's still a disproportionately larger amount of men. But it will change, with more and more women getting into science, technology, engineering and math. A lot of women who are head distillers come from those fields."

As for Kallman, she hopes there will be more strides made by the time her three teenagers—including two daughters—reach drinking age.

"I still think there's a long way to go. Change has been slow. We've seen it in politics, but we don't see it in big businesses enough—we certainly see change in entrepreneurial businesses, though," she says, citing statistics suggesting that women are opening more small businesses than men. "Entrepreneurial craft artisan businesses like the beer businesses, they're making things for themselves or their friends, they're innovating... it's very real and tangible. That's what I love about it. That's what I'm passionate about." ◆

METRO BOSTON'S INTERACTIVE GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND MIDNIGHT COUNTDOWNS

AGENDA for 12/24–1/13

Imagine that

Ring in '15 right.

DUCKS, GEESE AND SWANS are familiar fauna on Boston Common—a swarm of glowing jellyfish, not so much. But come New Year's Eve, you'll find 50 such specimens there for the second annual installment of Figment at First Night Boston, which promises to bring nearly 20 interactive installations to the Common. Besides those light-up jellies, there will be a park bench tricked out with faux fur and hundreds of LEDs, a giant TV wall playing wacky videos made for sing-alongs, a collaborative musical instrument that's controlled by dance moves and lots more participatory art, all free and open to the public. And the Figment festivities are just one part of the lineup for First Night, which also features ice skating and sculptures, poetry and story slams, light projections on City Hall, a fireworks cruise and plenty of live music, including a headlining performance by indie-rock stalwarts Yo La Tengo that should serve as a far better soundtrack to the start of 2015 than any rendition of "Auld Lang Syne." / Jacqueline Houton

FIGMENT AT FIRST NIGHT BOSTON 2015 start at 7:30 pm on Dec. 31 on Boston Common. free. bostonfigmentproject.org and firstnightboston.org.

PERFORMING ARTS

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

MONSTER MASH There are all manner of beasties in local playwright John Kuntz's Necessary Monsters, currently enjoying its world premiere with the SpeakEasy Stage Company. Most of them, however, won't look like the clawed monsters of childhood nightmares (though Borges' Book of Imaginary Beings was a source of inspiration). Set within a large wire cage—all the better to confine the big baddies, my dear—the surreal and far-from-linear play explores different forms of violence through a series of interconnected tales. They're told via different genres, from a horror flick to a noir film to a very odd children's television show. See it all come together at the BCA's Roberts Studio Theatre, where Necessary Monsters plays through Jan. 3. / Alexandra Cavallo

AQUA MAN The comedian, the actor, the party crasher: the legend. Love him, hate him or think he's batshit crazy, nobody can deny that Bill Murray is a fascinating man, with comedic and dramatic talent. Running from Christmas through Dec. 31, the Brattle Theatre's retrospective Not Just a Nut: The Essential Bill Murray celebrates early classics like Ghostbusters and more recent pictures like The Life Aquatic with Steve Zissou, in which Murray plays an underwater documentarian on a quest to exact revenge on a killer shark. But during his ship's final voyage, Zissou is forced to navigate more than the open sea—his estranged wife, a nosy journalist and his potentially blood-related co-pilot all rock the boat. All aboard for the Dec. 28 screening. / Katie Smith

Birdman or (The Unexpected Virtue of Ignorance) ★★★ There's a gimmick in this new tour de force from Alejandro González Iñárritu, but it's not what you're thinking. Sure, Michael Keaton is terrifically ironic as Riggan Thomson—aka Birdman, a nod to his time as Batman more than two decades ago—a washed-up actor attempting a "serious" comeback on Broadway by writing, directing and starring in an ill-advised adaptation of Raymond Carver stories. No, it's the single-take illusion that Iñárritu and cinematographer Emmanuel Lubezki employ when it serves little dramatic purpose, especially given the amount of time compression (the movie is set during the course of about a week). Lubezki won an Oscar for the same trick in Alfonso Cuaron's Gravity, and initially it seems to fit the backstage feel, as if we're watching a play within a play—but moving outside the theater, the technique is a scream for attention. That's a shame, given the nice work by Edward Norton as the stage star who tries to overtake Riggan's production, an understated Zach Galifianakis as Riggan's friend and producer, and Emma Stone out-acting everyone as Riggan's assistant. She's also the possibly schizophrenic actor's recovering addict daughter, who falls for her father's nemesis. Yeah, the script's the weakest part. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Dumb and Dumber To ★ America, you get what you deserve. You made this awful, virtually laugh-free sequel to a beloved 20-year-old comedy the number-one film at the box office during its opening weekend, ensuring we'll be witnessing the further misadventures of Lloyd Christmas (Jim Carrey) and Harry Dunne (Jeff Daniels) by about 2034, as the end credits of Bobby and Peter Farrelly's film threaten. The Rhode Island-based brothers' latest finds them taking their signature dimwit creations on a road trip to locate the child (Rachel Melvin) Harry never knew he had, the product of a one-time union with "titanic whore" Fraida Felcher (very good sport Kathleen Turner). In their 30s, these two were amiable idiots; now in their 50s, they simply seem mentally ill, which is no fun to watch. Carrey has never seemed so desperate as a performer, while Daniels—who's become a terrific actor in the past two decades—plays his role with more pathos than the film deserves. The Farrelly brothers used to be masters of comic timing and well-orchestrated gags, with real affection for their characters. Now, they've seemingly given up, and the joke's on us, the ticket-buying public. (At Boston Common, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Foxcatcher ★★1/2 In this true-crime drama, Steve Carell is nearly unrecognizable as billionaire John du Pont, outfitted with a prominent prosthetic nose. Channing Tatum also sports a fake proboscis, and cauliflower ears, as 1984 Olympic gold medal-winning wrestler Mark Schultz. The makeup is an unconvincing distraction, a miscalculation by Bennett Miller, the talented director of Capote, who'd resisted burying Philip Seymour Hoffman under latex. It's unfortunate, given the strong work of his leads. Carell is deliberately creepy and off-putting, adopting a lilting monotone that's as vacant as du Pont's eyes. Tatum seethes with silent rage in the shadow of his older, more successful Olympian brother Dave (a bearded Mark Ruffalo), a family man and gym owner who's happy to hear that du Pont is making the underemployed Mark a coach at du Pont's Foxcatcher Farm, a massive estate in suburban Philadelphia. But du Pont eventually becomes disappointed in Mark and offers Dave a coaching position, setting the stage for tragedy. The film is set during the buildup to the 1988 Olympics, but the shooting that's shoehorned into the final 10 minutes didn't actually transpire until 1996, making the supposition of what may have fueled the climactic crime feel as false as the nose on Carell's face. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies ★★ Academy Award-winning filmmaker Peter Jackson is milking Middle Earth for all it's worth, concluding his second trilogy spawned from the pages of J.R.R. Tolkien's fantasy classics in bloated fashion, pushing a slim children's book well past the breaking point with a third movie that lasts 2 hours and 24 minutes. There's no danger of this final trek winning the Oscars that his final installment of The Lord of the Rings trilogy took home to New Zealand, which still serves as this film's stomping, hacking and slashing grounds. But there's hardly any Hobbit in it, with Bilbo Baggins (Martin Freeman) either relegated to the sidelines or knocked out cold as Thorin Oakenshield (Richard Armitage) goes mad with "Dragon Sickness" and Gandalf (Ian McKellen) rallies the dwarves—whose names I still can't remember after three films—to engage in video-game action captured in harshly lit HD that makes the movie look like a syndicated TV show from the '90s. Even those had their charms, though—and there's precious little here. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Horrible Bosses 2 ★1/2 "We're not criminals! We suck at crime!" yells an exasperated Dale (Charlie Day) to his buddies Nick (Jason Bateman) and Kurt (Jason Sudeikis). Based on this sequel to their 2011 hit, Horrible Bosses, you wouldn't think they were very good at comedy, either. Not that the original was all that great, but this new picture isn't even about horrible bosses. Sean Anders, coming off of the execrable Adam Sandler comedy That's My Boy, tepidly takes the directing reins from Seth Gordon, transforming our hapless heroes into idiot inventors in a plot that finds their dreams of becoming their own bosses being destroyed by a father-son team (Oscar winner Christoph Waltz and Star Trek's Chris Pine) who run a gigantic catalog retailing business. Their hopes dashed, they devise a "kidnaping" scheme, while Anders and his team of writers contrive ways of bringing back the first film's Jennifer Aniston, Kevin

Spacey and Jamie Foxx. Yes, that's three Academy Award winners in a mildly offensive film that finds Aniston sodomizing Bateman with a strap-on dildo. Buy a ticket, and he might not be the only one feeling screwed. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

THE HUNGER GAMES: MOCKINGJAY - PART 1 ★★ With barely enough material to pad out 45 minutes, let alone more than two hours, this filmed version of about 40 percent of Suzanne Collins' young adult novel is one of the worst cash grabs I've ever seen. Director Francis Lawrence greatly elevated the second installment of this serialized movie series after Gary Ross' languid adaptation of the original, but he can't do much with a film that's all set-up for next year's conclusion. And Oscar winner Jennifer Lawrence continues to impress as the ridiculously named Katniss Everdeen, but she's given little to do but mope in an underground bunker, venturing out only a few times. Once is to shoot a deer—before deciding not to—and then a couple of times it's to shoot...public service announcements, to help rally the rebellion against President Snow (Donald Sutherland) and the Capitol, where a climactic mission is being mounted (much of it off-screen, unfortunately) to rescue one-third of Katniss' love triangle, Peeta Mellark (Josh Hutcherson). The film is dedicated to Philip Seymour Hoffman, who died before completing his role as Plutarch Heavensbee. OK, all of these names are ridiculous. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

THE IMITATION GAME ★★★ Director Morten Tyldum spends so much time setting up complex puzzles that he oversimplifies the life of his central enigma: Alan Turing, a British genius posthumously regarded as a father of the modern computer. Fortunately, Benedict Cumberbatch expertly plays the tortured intellect, who was enlisted to join "half a dozen crossword enthusiasts in a small village in the south of London" racing to crack the supposedly unbreakable Nazi codes of Germany's Enigma machine during World War II. It's Turing's hidden homosexuality that serves as the key piece to the puzzle constructed by screenwriter Graham Moore, working from a biography that revealed more about the real Turing, including how he was fascinated by the scene in Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs where the evil queen dips an apple into poison. Turing was sentenced for indecency in '52, and onscreen text informs us of his tragic suicide at the age of 41, a year after beginning government-mandated "chemical castration." It's a very conventional ending to a film about a complex, puzzling life. What we don't see is that Turing died of cyanide poisoning—a half-eaten apple beside him, foam coating his mouth, no prince to save him. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

INTERSTELLAR ★★ Christopher Nolan's latest film is set in an unspecified near-future where climate change has taken hold and man's ambition for science and exploration is a mostly forgotten dream. Matthew McConaughey's Cooper was once a Chuck Yeager-like test pilot for the remnants of NASA; now he's a farmer. In fact, everyone seems to be a farmer, fruitlessly trying to coax crops from the endless supply of dirt that keeps raining from the sky—but Nolan isn't content to keep the corn relegated to the fields. McConaughey's a terrific actor, and while a secret mission to save humanity will rocket him to the furthest reaches of another galaxy and even into—cue the Twilight Zone music—a fifth dimension, Nolan has marooned him with a script that contains very Earth-bound bromides about how love is the key...to everything. As an ill-advised subplot develops in the second act, we discover the threat to Cooper and the human race has less to do with the secrets of the universe than with man's nature—which is literally embodied by a character named "Mann," in case you didn't get it. Some space is best left unexplored. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Into the Woods ★★½ Rob Marshall returns to the movie musical after five years, and although this adaptation of Stephen Sondheim and James Lapine's 1986 stage production avoids becoming the debacle that was Nine, he's still blocking the action as poorly as he did more than a decade ago with Chicago. But then, that film won six Oscars, including Best Picture, so someone likes what he's doing. And frankly, his latest is well-cast, with Meryl Streep headlining as the Witch and Johnny Depp as the Wolf in this mélange of Brothers Grimm fairy tales built around the characters of a baker (James Corden) and his barren wife (Emily Blunt). Streep's blue-haired sorceress bursts into their shop, offering to grant the couple a baby, if only they'll retrieve items belonging to Cinderella (Anna Kendrick), Little Red Riding Hood (Lilla Crawford), Rapunzel (Mackenzie Mauzy) and Jack (Daniel Huttlestone), he of the Beanstalk. Most of the dialogue is sung; if that isn't your thing, you'll be missing Chris Pine's dazzlingly hammy turn as Prince Charming, where he unleashes his inner Shatner in a way barely glimpsed in his Captain Kirk role during two Star Trek pictures. (At Kendall Square.)

Nightcrawler ★★★ Dan Gilroy sure wishes it was 1976. The well-regarded screenwriter's first time in the director's chair finds him plumbing that year's Network for his less-than-insightful look at the media's lack of ethics. At a horrific crash scene, underemployed thief Louis Bloom (Jake Gyllenhaal) chances upon Joe Loder (Bill Paxton), a veteran "nightcrawler"—a freelance camera man who films accidents, fires and murders and tells our inquisitive antihero that "if it bleeds, it leads," a notion that was already old when Paddy Chayefsky penned Sidney Lumet's classic. Gilroy even hired his wife (actress Rene Russo) to recycle Faye Dunaway's role as a ratings-starved TV news executive, completing the family affair by employing brothers Tony (his producer) and John (his editor) to aid in his slick, derivative production, which is elevated by a wonderfully wormy performance by Gyllenhaal. Having dropped 30 pounds so his eyes pop from his gaunt, haunted face, Gyllenhaal adopts a manner that recalls Robert De Niro's Travis Bickle, another morally bent antihero who originated in '76, in Martin Scorsese's Taxi Driver. True, Gilroy's picture springs from the spare parts of better films, but its dark humor stings timelessly. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Theory of Everything ★★★½ There's more to Stephen Hawking than the 80-minute look you may have glimpsed during A Brief History of Time, Errol Morris' extraordinary 1991 nonfiction film about the life and work of the renowned theoretical physicist. Here, director James Marsh views Hawking from the perspective of his first wife, Jane, adapting her memoir into a touching biography. As Jane, Felicity Jones displays tremendous chemistry with the superb Eddie Redmayne, who does almost as much with limited mobility as Daniel Day-Lewis in his Oscar-winning turn in My Left Foot. When we first see him as a 21-year-old Cambridge student, Redmayne's Hawking shows subtle hints of his not-yet-diagnosed motor neuron disease, but when his legs eventually buckle beneath him, his head hitting the pavement with a sickening crack, the only one to disregard his doctor's assertion that he has two years to live is Jane, then a medieval studies major and a devout member of the Church of England. Stephen lacks faith in "celestial dictators," but the two navigate their different belief systems together for a quarter of a century—a love story that defines them and defies time more than just briefly. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Top Five ★★★ Chris Rock writes and directs this scabrously funny follow-up to his 2007 directing debut, I Think I Love My Wife—a reworking of Eric Rohmer's Chloe in the Afternoon—with this star-studded, episodic riff on Federico Fellini's La Dolce Vita and Woody Allen's Stardust Memories. The man has taste. He also has comic chops. While Rock's work behind the camera is serviceable, it's his work in front of it that gives the movie its funky rhythm. He plays comedian turned film star Andre Allen, a man who's grown tired of making people laugh—or maybe he's just afraid that he's ceased being funny since going on the wagon. Either way, Rock's plenty funny playing him, especially once he goes on the defensive during an interview with Chelsea Brown (Rosario Dawson), a journalist for The New York Times, a paper that's given his films nothing but bad reviews. There's also a Cinderella story mixed in, which isn't to say this is a fairy tale—not with foul-mouthed talents like Kevin Hart, Tracy Morgan, Cedric the Entertainer, J.B. Smoove and rapper DMX filling out the cast. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Whiplash ★★★½ Even before the film's title comes into focus on the black screen, a quickening beat from a snare drum compels your attention, building with military precision until it ends with an echo, as if a muted gunshot has gone off. But there are no weapons deployed in writer/director Damien Chazelle's picture—only psychological warfare, focused on Andrew Neyman (Miles Teller), a 19-year-old drum prodigy in his first semester under Terence Fletcher, top conductor at Manhattan's Shaffer Conservatory, a fictionalized version of Juilliard. Menacingly portrayed by J.K. Simmons, Fletcher is seductive and terrifying, making Vern Schillinger, the Detroit native's character on HBO's Oz, look like Mr. Holland. Neyman pushes himself so hard for his taskmaster that his hands become raw and bloodied; Chazelle's drama nearly doubles as a horror film, with Neyman a man driven to kill, his drum set the victim. Like a great jazz riff, Whiplash becomes a series of variations on a theme, as the student fails to live up to his—or his teacher's—standards. And like many a great jazz song, the movie is sometimes unwieldy, but it builds to a hugely satisfying, electrifying finish. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Wild ★★★ Director Jean-Marc Vallée follows up last year's Dallas Buyers Club with this chronicle of a lost soul's 1,100-mile trek toward redemption and renewal, adapted from Cheryl Strayed's memoir by novelist Nick Hornby, who makes her journey as internal as it is outdoorsy. Reese Witherspoon plays Strayed as a woman in way over her head as she sets off alone on the Pacific Crest Trail with way too much gear, little of it practical. When first we see her, Strayed's well into her hike, tearing off a toenail bloodied from boots that are too small. But the real suffering came before. We flash back through various episodes of her life, from dealing with an abusive father in her troubled childhood (where she's played by Bobbi Strayed Lindstrom, the real Strayed's daughter) to the better upbringing she escaped to with her mother, Bobbi (a terrific Laura Dern), before things became worse again. This isn't the America's Sweetheart persona you expect from Witherspoon. Whoring herself out for heroin in flashback and frantically licking dew off of her tent to survive in the wild, she gives one of her most stripped-down performances to date, in every sense. (At Kendall Square.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

ON THIN ICE "Here's to another goddamn new year!" Travis Morrison utters sardonically in the tone-setting line for "The Ice of Boston," the Dismemberment Plan's 1997 New Year's Eve anthem and crowd favorite. Breaking onto the mid-'90s indie-rock scene with a new sound—skittery, prog rock-like guitar riffs underscoring Morrison's almost spoken-word vocals—the band claimed to have no love for the tone-deafness of "two million drunk Bostonians" 17 years ago. But you wouldn't know it from their choice for the final city on their 2014 tour. Pretty meta, huh? Ring in the goddamn new year with the D-Plan at Brighton Music Hall on Dec. 31. / Grace Rasmus

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

COMIC FANS

Perhaps the only books you can judge by their covers are graphic novels, though you'd do well to crack them open and delve deeper. Such is the case with Somerville illustrator Raul Gonzalez and Concord native Karl Stevens' works, on display in Two Artists and Their Books at the Suffolk University Gallery. In Gonzalez' Lowriders in Space, a team of unlikely mechanics works to build the best car in the galaxy, while former Boston Phoenix cartoonist Stevens outlines a year living with a professor after a gnarly breakup in The Lodger. The exhibit provides some comics relief through Jan. 25. / Sarah Hagman

TRUE NORTH

The North End may now be known as a destination for red sauce and cannolis, but over the centuries it's served as a home for multiple waves of immigrants, drawing not just Italian transplants but Irish and Jewish ones too. Anita Diamant, the best-selling author of The Red Tent, taps into that past with her latest historical novel, The Boston Girl. It follows the witty Addie Baum, who grows up in a one-room tenement in the North End and leaves behind her immigrant parents' life in search of love and a career. Meet a heroine with plenty of chutzpah when Diamant brings The Boston Girl to Porter Square Books on Jan. 5. / Kim Lester

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of t he three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. Julie Crockford, Malcolm Rogers and Ben Taylor at An Emerald Evening

BUNCH OF BOZOS

Anyone who ever dreamed of running away and joining the circus would've had their fantasy fulfilled at Under the Big Top, the Children's Hospital League gala held at the Fairmont Copley Plaza.

Guests were greeted by a ringmaster on stilts, and clowns in both the literal and figurative sense populated the cocktail reception, where a giant sculpture of an elephant balancing on a ball dominated the bar. Prominent among the throng: Channel 4 hottie Lisa Hughes and her shutterbug husband, Mike Casey, enchantress Elizabeth Georgantas, the radiant Andrea Rittenberg Segel and her other half, Jay, the devilishly handsome Alex DiPietro and his gorgeous brunette bride, Lindsey, eminence grise Evan Kushner, blond bombshell Kat VanDernoot, party pair Lynne and Gary Smith, co-chairs Rachel Gilli and Lauren Rosen, and one woman who said, "Clowns freak me out. I'm not sure how I'm going to make it through this evening."

After passed apps that included corn dogs, dinner was served in the ballroom, although there was one attendee who said, "I'm on a strict cotton candy and vodka diet." The live auction, which included a biking trip through Bordeaux and a visit to the annual Easter egg hunt at the White House, raised a huge amount of money, and then the dancing started, which prompted the following remark: "This is just like my bar mitzvah... except I can drink legally and I actually stand a chance of seeing a woman's breasts at the end of the night."

WITH A SIDE OF HUMBLE

Chew on this: The Dow Jones has almost doubled in the past decade, but one in five American children are hungry. That disparity is the tip of the iceberg that the guests at Food for Thought floated on while raising money for the Grow Clinic at Boston Medical Center.

Held at the Mandarin Oriental, the annual dinner is both a major reality check and a major good time, attracting a big-hearted crowd that included the likes of Boston's answer to Mother Theresa, Dr. Deborah Frank, supermodel-in-hiding Randi Cutler and the chrome-domed Joel, most of the Belkin mishpucha, the achingly lovely Amy Fisher, dizygotic do-gooders Paul and Wesley Karger with their beautiful brides, Pamela and Ashley, emcee extraordinaire Heather Unruh, silver fox Michael Winter and his foxy wife, Deb Goldberg, the ethereal Mary Woolfson, ambassador Alan Solomont and the delightful Susan, Chestnut Hill chatelaine Nancy Adams and the dashing Scott Schoen, bedazzling Toni Dixon and her hubby, George, impresaria extraordinaire Marti Jones, the magical Linda Matzkin, yummy mummy Molly Schoeck and numerous equally sparkly others.

True to the spirit of the evening, the centerpieces were made of vegetables that would be repurposed for the Grow Clinic's food pantry, but not before one guest sat down, put his napkin in his lap and said, "Is this a DIY salad bar?"

ALWAYS LOOK ON THE BRIGHT SIDE OF LIFE

If you like seeing your name on public things, going into politics is a fairly sure bet—but when you're as modest as Michael Dukakis, it's simply an occupational hazard. The former governor and presidential candidate was honored at An Emerald Evening, a cocktail reception hosted by the Emerald Necklace Conservancy at the Museum of Fine Arts.

Spotted mingling among all the old masters: board chair Ben Taylor, museum grand poobah Malcolm Rogers, mega-philanthropists Wendy Shattuck and Sam Plimpton, the soignee Jane Roy, uber-babe Tatiana Webb, power chick Geri Denterlein and her other half, legendary journalist Jack Thomas, his former compatriot Tim Leland with the always stunning Julie Hatfield, and so on and so forth.

There were glowing remarks from a variety of distinguished people, and it was announced that Riverside Park in Brookline will be renamed in honor of the governor this spring, which prompted one attendee to grumble, "Yeah, but first we have to get through the goddamn winter." ◆
